ton, Mass., for a short visit.

—Mr. H. W. Grinnell and family have gone to Adamsville, R. I., for the summer.

—Mr. Henry R. Hallett is to build a fine residence in this city during the summer.

—Mrs. E. S. Hamblin will pass the summer as usual at North Scituate.

—The Newton drum corps furnished music for the memorial day services at Watertown.

—Mr. S. M. Sayford of this city is announced to speak at the gospel meeting at Town Hall, Watertown, Sunday afternoon.

—The Rev. David Gregg, D. D., of New York City, will preach in the Eliot Church, Sunday, June 13th, morning and evening.

—The Newton and Nonantum clubs had a run to Salem on Monday, where they took dinner at the Essex House and afterwards attended the Lynn races.

—Some 150 wheelmen visited the headquarters of the Nonantum club, late last Friday afternoon, and caused about a barrel of ginger ale to disappear.

—Mr. H. H. Boardman, the former proprietor of the GRAPHIC, has removed to Providence, R. I., where he will reside with his son.

—Waban Lodge, I. O. O. F., has had two handsome chandeliers put up, and they were used for the first time, Thursday night.

—Tuesday evening, June 8th, the Newton bicycle club will hold its regular monthly meeting at the residence of G. W. Hastings in Newtonville.

—A. E. Tupper has the contract for building John McCammon's new house on Richardson street, on land recently purchased from Postmaster Latta.

—The strength of the rustic bridge in Farlow Park was proved on Monday, as it was crowded with people during the dress parade. Some alarm was felt by the bystanders, but the structure gave proof of its having been well built.

—The city water department is laying a greater number of service pipes this season than at any previous time since the water works were introduced. This shows, of course, that a large number of new houses have been built.

—Mr. S. M. Sayford has been invited by a large number of the members of Eliot Church to attend one of the Friday evening meetings and give some account of his evangelistic work in the South. It is probable that he will accept for Friday evening, June 11th.

—A. A. Glines photographed on Friday afternoon a party of twenty gentlemen and lady cyclists, who had paid a visit to Cambridge and the college buildings, returning by way of the Cycle Hall, Newton-ville, where they had lunch. The party represented a dozen or more cities.

—Work has begun upon the parsonage of the Church of Our Lady Help of Christians, and it will be pushed forward as fast as possible. Mr. Isaac F. Jones has the contract, and the cost will be about $13,000.
The building will be of brick and three stories high.

—Mr. Henry E. Cobb and the party that accompanied him on his tally ho coaching trip, arrived home Tuesday morning, having had favorable weather and a delightful trip. The party consisted of Mr. Cobb and wife, Mr. and Mrs. Sturgis Potter, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. E. Field, and Mr. and Mrs. W.
H. Ellison. The first night they stopped in Concord, the second in Lancaster, and on Friday they arrived at Wachusett. Saturday they drove around the mountain and on Sunday rested. On Monday they drove to Westboro and the next morning arrived in Newton. The party made a great sensation along the route.

—On Saturday afternoon while Mrs.
Stanton, daughter of Mr. J. N. Bacon, Mrs. Gross and Mrs. Joseph Bacon were coming home from Newton Highlands, their horse became frightened and ran down Walnut street to Newtonville. They would probably have escaped serious accident, but the railroad gates were down and the horse whirled around into Newton-ville avenue with such speed that the carriage was overturned and the occupants thrown out. Mrs. Stanton was rendered insensible from the shock, and carried to Dr. Hunt's residence, but it was some time before she revived. She was cut on the head, but fortunately her injuries were not serious. The other ladies escaped with slight bruises.

—The last parish reception of Grace church was held on the evening of June 1st.
A very large audience filled the parlors, to enjoy the music of the High School orchestra and witness the exceedingly pretty tableaux that consisted of both pictures and statuary; in the latter were seen "Innocence with her dove," "Pygmalion and Galatea" and the Angel of Peace. Three children's faces peeping from a large gilt frame as "Cherubs" was charming. At the close of the evening a short play "Eve of the Wedding" was very gracefully rendered by Miss Clark, while the tableau

"Goodnight" by little Lilla Doane of Dorchester ended an evening that all will remember with pleasure.

—See W. Thorp's advertisement of awnings.

—The Nonantum Club has 12 men in the League parade.

—Mr. A. J. Gordon left town Wednesday evening, and on Thursday sailed for Europe.

Gould, D. D., of Worcester.

down an excellent walk at the junction of Centre and Washington streets. "A long church on Sunday, in the absence of Rev.

Mr. Titus, who has been attending the convention at Ashbury Park, N. J.

—The committee on public property have accepted the plans of Allen & Kenway for the enlargement of the public li-

about the Newton Natural History Society's "Field Day" to Lake Winnepesaukee and White Mountains, can learn all needed particulars of Dr. J. F. Frisbie.

—E. P. Burnham won the two mile tricycle race at Lynn on Monday, in 7m. 42, 1-5s., against Hendee of Springfield, who took a header. Burnham also won the second prize in the three mile handicap.

—Some hoodlums threw a paving stone through one of the large windows in A.
Brackett's coal office on Washington street, the other night. The crash was heard by residents in the vicinity, but the guilty parties made their escape.

—In Mr. Gooch's amusing poem on the Newton Knot, the Lincoln mentioned was formerly a president of the railroad, and not Professor Lincoln or Abraham Lincoln. Although President of the road he at one time got on the wrong train, and went to the wrong Newton.

—The first Field Day of the season of the Newton Natural History Society will be on Saturday afternoon, June 19th, at Hammond's pond, and will include a ride around the circle, by way of the Circuit railroad. Particular directions and all needed information will be given next week.

—Major Carter, of the retired list of the regular army, and the gentleman who helped to introduce military drill at the High School, was in town on Monday, and attended the memorial day exercises. He is now at Amherst, but has not lost his interest in the Newton schools, and he complimented the High School battalion very highly.

—Wm. Durant, one of the wood peddler frauds, was arrested last week Friday by Officer Henthorne. He had what looked to be a foot of wood, which he was trying to sell to a gentleman, but when the officer investigated it, there was not more than a quarter of that. The man said he was a driver for D. McFarland of Boston, but he was fined $10 and costs. Newton people are learning that it pays to buy wood of the local dealers.

—At the Y. M. C. A. meeting last Sunday Mr. S. M. Sayford preached an impressive sermon on "Seeking God." A large audience was present. Extra singing by a quartet, and a duet by the Misses Latta was an interesting feature of the service.
Next Sunday Rev. Mr. Nichols, pastor of the Methodist church, will preach from the text "who touched Me?" He is an impressive speaker, and all will enjoy making his acquaintance. Mr. Hugh Campbell will provide solo and quartet singing in addition to the usual praise service. All are invited at 4 p. m.

—The public schools will close regularly on July 2d, but it is probable that the School Board will permit them to close on Tuesday, June 29th.

—There was a large attendance at Grace Church Thursday evening, when nine persons were confirmed. The music by the church quartet was exceptionally good, and the altar was decorated with white flowers and white embroidered hangings.
Bishop Paddock preached from the theme,
"Christ at the Right Hand of God."

—Attention is called to Mr. Allen's swimming and bathing prospectus for the season of 1886. Hereafter, no person in Newton need plead want of opportunity as an excuse for inability to swim. Ample accommodations for dressing are now afforded, and arrangements can be made to leave;
bathing suits in charge of the attendants,
a great convenience to ladies. The success of this venture of Mr. Allen last season is a guarantee of a greater success this year.

—Mrs. Sarah E. Trowbridge died this (Friday) morning at the residence of her daughter on Nonantum street, after a long and painful illness, aged 90 years. She was the widow of Stephen W. Trowbridge, who was one of the prominent men of Newton and held many important offices.
She was the mother of the late F. M. Trowbridge, who was assistant City Treasurer for many years, and of Stephen W. Trowbridge of Boston, Theodore W., of New York, and Mrs. Geo. W. Hall, Mrs. Ephraim Wetherbee, and Mrs. B. S. Wetherbee, all of this city. Mrs. Trowbridge lived to see herself surrounded by a numerous family of grandchildren and great-grandchildren, and her old age was happy and honored. The funeral will take place at the house on Nonantum street, on Monday, at 2 p. m., probably.

—The Revere Bank of Boston has printed for private circulation among its stockholders a history of the bank, in which this well deserved tribute is paid to its President, Mr. Geo. S. Bullens of this city. It says "selected by the directors to become the President, the customers and the public generally confirm the wisdom of the choice;" "with most pleasing manners, acuteness in successfully and quickly separating the right and wrong in financial dealings, and strict attention to the business of the bank, it is easy to see that success cannot but crown his administration." Mr. Bullens has been President since March 30, 1878.

The Church Fair.

The fair in aid of the new parsonage of the church of Our Lady Help of Christians opened on Monday night in the basement of the church, with a very large attendance. The large basement has been very handsomely fitted up with tables draped with lace, which occupy three sides of it, and the floor is left vacant for the promenaders, and the patrons of the shooting gallery, the scales and the refreshment table.
The ladies of the parish have shown great taste in arranging the tables to the best advantage, and they are brilliantly lighted, and make a fine show. They are covered with fancy work, crazy quilts, pillows, oil paintings, china and glass ware, books, lamps, and a hundred other things, all arranged to catch the eye. Among the pictures are large and handsomely framed photographs of Father Dolan, Father Gil-feather and Father Boyle of Beverly, formerly of Newton, and fine oil paintings from Mrs. J. B. Sullivan, of South Boston, Mrs. J. E. Cassidy of Watertown, and others. Some fine samples of embroidery by Miss Gilfeather and Miss Harkins are shown. A large model of a steam engine in a glass case from Mr. Baldwin of Somerville attracts much attention, and many other curious and inviting things are displayed. A fine piano, and an elegant gold watch await some lucky persons, and among useful things are orders for six tons of coal, half from Albert Brackett and half from Hills, Bullens & Co. The ladies of the church give all visitors a hearty welcome, and an opportunity to help along the new parish building at the same time.
The fair will continue for three weeks. The attendance has been very large so far and the tables have been liberally patronized.

The Magazines.

The Decorator and Furnisher for June has introduced many improvements. The pages have been reduced somewhat in size, giving a wider margin and reducing the columns from three to two. The illustrations are finer and the general effect much better than heretofore. It is now one of our foremost art magazines, typographically and pictorially, as well as in the literary sense. Among the articles are many that will interest the ladies, notably, one on economical furnishing, how to rid a house of moths and the like, selections of wall paper, a description of a Philadelphia house, magnificently illustrated, a fine picture of a New York bedroom, neatly furnished, a great number of other desirable pieces. An elegant colored plate showing original designs for two ceilings, Renaissance and Louis XV styles, is a feature of great value in this number. The plate is one of the finest we have ever seen. The Decorator and Furnisher is published at 30 East 14th street, New York.

The June Pansy is as bright as its namesake. The stories, poems and Flower Chorus are unusually attractive because of their timely import and seasonable aid. Apropos of the month, it furnishes the Rose Game, a delightful out-of-door entertainment, and one that will be entered into with zest by the entire household. Illustrated, $1.00 a year. D. Lothrop & Co. Publishers, Boston. Specimen free.

The June number of the Atlantic Monthly opens with the second installment of Mr. William Henry Bishop's striking new serial, "The Golden Justice," and the number also contains portions of Henry James' very remarkable socialistic novel, "The Princess Casamassima," and Charles Egbert Craddock's brilliant romance, "In the Clouds." Under the title of "A Roman Gentleman under the Empire," Miss Harriet W. Preston gives a charmingly life-like account of the younger Pliny, and of his times. The short story of this issue, "Valentine's Chance," by Lillie Chace Wyman, is excellent.

The portrait bust of Benjamin Franklin, by Houdon, the French sculptor, now in the collection of the Metropolitan Museum of New York, is reproduced—the drawing by Kenyon Cox, the engraving by Whitney—for a frontispiece for the June Century. The opening paper of the same number is an article by Austin Dobson, illustrated by Henry Sandham and Alfred Dawson, entitled "A Literary Ramble along the Thames from Putnam to Chiswick." Mr. Howell's story has an installment that will provoke much discussion. Dr. Buckley gives his views of "Faith Healing and Kindred Phenomena" in a vigorous manner, and there are a great number of other interesting articles.

The best literary and artistic talent of the day continues to be drawn upon by the publishers of Wide Awake. The June number is an exceptionally good one, and should be read by all the boys and girls who enjoy wholesome literature.—D. Lothrop & Co., Boston.

St. Nicholas for June is, as usual, full of interesting matter for children, and even adults can not help being attracted by its bright articles and artistic illustrations. Mrs. Burnett's charming serial has a longer installment than usual, and Frank R. Stockton, J. T. Trowbridge, Horace E. Scudder, and many other well known authors are represented. The frontispiece is a delightful engraving of a June morning, drawn by E. C. Held.

Bird-Housekeeping.

From John Burroughs's illustrated paper on Birds' Eggs, in the June Century, we quote as follows: "The bluebirds early took possession, and in June their first brood had flown. The wrens had been hanging around, evidently with an eye on the place (such little comedies may be witnessed anywhere), and now very naturally thought it was their turn. A day or two after the young bluebirds had flown, I noticed some fine, dry grass clinging to the entrance to the cavity; a circumstance which I understood a few moments later, when the wren rushed by me into the cover of a small Norway spruce, hotly pursued by the male bluebird. It was a brown streak and a blue streak pretty close together. The wrens had gone to housecleaning, and the bluebird had returned to find his bed and bedding being pitched out-of-doors, and had thereupon given the wrens to understand in the most emphatic manner that he had no intention of vacating the premises so early in the season. Day after day, for more than two weeks, the male bluebird had to clear his premises of these intruders. It occupied much of his time and not a little of mine, as I sat with a book in a summer house near by, laughing at his pretty fury and spiteful onset. On two occasions the wren rushed under the chair in which I sat, and a streak of blue lightning almost flashed in my very face. One day, just as I had passed the tree in which the cavity was placed, I heard the wren scream desperately; turning, I saw the little vagabond fall into the grass with the wrathful bluebird fairly upon him; the latter had returned just in time to catch him, and was evidently bent on punishing him well. But in the squabble in the grass, the wren escaped, and took refuge in the friendly evergreen. The bluebird paused for a moment with outstretched wings looking for the fugitive, then flew away. A score of times during the month of June did I see the wren taxing every energy to get away from the bluebird. He would dart into the stone wall, under the floor of the summerhouse, into the weeds—anywhere to hide his diminished head. The bluebird with his bright coat looked like a policeman in uniform in pursuit of some wicked, rusty little street gamin. Generally the favorite house of refuge of the wrens was the little spruce into which their pursuer made no attempt to follow them. The female would sit concealed amid the branches, clattering in a scolding, fretful way, while the male, with his eye upon his tormenter, would perch on the topmost shoot and sing. Why he sang at such times, whether in triumph or derision, or to keep his courage up and reassure his mate, I could not make out. When his song was suddenly cut short, and I glanced to see him dart down into the spruce, my eye usually caught a twinkle of blue wings hovering near. The wrens finally gave up the fight, and their enemies reared their second brood in peace."

Death of Miss Braman.

In the Georgetown Advocate of May 15th, is a memorial notice of Miss Mary P. Braman, who died in Auburndale May 4th, and was buried in Georgetown, from which we make an extract: "Few knew the value and beauty of her quiet life. In the stricken home, where so much of the brightness and sunshine has gone out, she was best appreciated. All who had a share in her strong, true affection must feel it a rare privilege to have been numbered among her friends. Between a rising and setting sun her mortal agony endured and ended. One of the brightest of May mornings a few chosen friends gathered near the open grave. Bright gleams of sunshine across the waxy features hinted of the glory of the Lily which hath no need of the sun. Pure white lilies whispered of the resurrection. Soft breezes crossed the dear face like a benediction more tender than the mother's parting touch—This was her burial." Her father, Rev. Dr. Milton P. Braman, who died four years ago, remembered in Auburndale as a kind and genial friend and neighbor, a man of wonderful memory and superior intellect, but was known to a former generation as a very giant among preachers and thinkers. Side by side, the father and daughter are now at rest, and the mother and son who remain with us, have our sympathy in their sad bereavement.

A New Oratorio.

It is said that one of Newton's resident musicians is engaged in the composition of a new oratorio, entitled, "The Advent, Crucifixion and Ascension of The Messiah," arranged for chorus solos and orchestra. It is expected that the work will be completed during the summer, and the first public performance given in Newton during the Christmas holidays by a chorus comprising 150 to 200 voices, eminent soloists, and the very best orchestral performers; rehearsals will commence early in October next, and singers desiring to connect themselves with the Choral society, who are to produce this, and other oratorios in the future, are invited to address Jos. W. Foster, Newtonville, as early as possible in the matter.

Death of C. B. Patten.

The friends of Mr. C. B. Patten, cashier of Suffolk Bank in Boston, were much grieved by the publication of many false details in regard to his sudden death last Saturday. His health had been somewhat impaired by close application to business and to literary work. But there was no mental derangement, and no reason for special apprehension. The distressing accident was made more painful by the inventions and exaggerations of newspaper reports. Mr. Patten was for many years a resident of Wellesley Hills, where he will be long remembered with admiration and regret.

—There are to be Yum-Yum parados. Considering that they are hardly large enough to hide one head, let alone two, the name attached to them is both disappointing and exasperating.—[The Judge.]

—"Everything seems to grow in this country except me," said a stranger, sadly. "And who are you?" was asked with much sympathy. "Alas, cruel fate!" was the mournful reply, "I am a New York Monument Fund."—[The Hatchet.]

—"Grandpa," said Teddy, as the old gentleman woke up from a loud sounding dinner nap, "if you would give your nose a spoonful of paregoric, don't you think you could put it to sleep, too?"—[Burdette in Brooklyn Eagle.]

—Col. A. K. McClure mentions in his new book, "The South," that New Orleans under Ben Butler was "ruled with the iron heel which only war can wield." We commend this sentence to the careful consideration of the congressional orator who remarked, incidentally, a few days ago, that the Republicans are engaged in "an effort to hamstring the ship of state."—[Washington Hatchet.]

Why continue the use of irritating powders, snuffs or liquids. Ely's Cream Balm, pleasant of application and a sure cure for catarrh and cold in head, can be had for 50c. at druggists. It is easily applied with the finger, is safe and pleasant, and is curing the most obstinate cases. It gives relief at once.

Having experienced marked relief from nasal catarrh and hoarseness by the use of Ely's Cream Balm, I recommend it to singers, clergymen and others afflicted.—Louis E. Phillips, 1428 N. Y. avenue, N. W., Washington, D. C.

A PUBLIC BENEFACCTION.

How to laundry linen as it is done in Troy, N. Y., has been kept a secret long enough; it can and should be done in every family. The ELASTIC STARCH is the only starch in the United States that is put up by men who have a practical knowledge of the laundry profession. It requires no cooking, keeps the iron from sticking and linen from blistering while ironing, and gives shirts, cuffs and collars that stiffness and beautiful polish they have when new, which, everybody knows, keeps them clean twice as long. Beware of imitations. See that the name J. C. HUMINGER & BRO., New Haven, Conn., is on every package.

ALDERMAN POWERS'S ORATION.

The most marked feature of Alderman Powers's oration was its strong common sense. There was no attempt at spread-eagles, but it was a practical talk to practical men. It abounded in facts arranged in a striking and interesting way, which gave his hearers many new ideas of the magnitude of the war and its results. The tribute paid to the noted dead of the year that is past, Grant and Hancock, were worthy of them, and the speaker's reference to the new South, and its earnest efforts towards education and the development of its resources, were fitting and timely. The men who did the real fighting during the war have proved time and again that they have buried "the bloody shirt" and are brothers again in interests and feeling. The speaker recognized this and also that Jeff Davis in his foolish ravings represents no one but himself. He has been left far behind in the progress the country has made during a quarter of a century. It is gratifying to every patriotic citizen to see that all sectional feeling is dying out and that the North and the South are again one nation. There is no doubt of the patriotism of the veteran soldiers, and that part of the speech must have been gratifying to them. Let us all hope that what is called the bloody shirt will never be waved again, no matter what political campaign may be in progress, or whose fortunes might be advanced by it. Another gratifying feature of the oration was the tribute paid to Newton's glorious record during the war. The city has reason to be proud of the great number of valiant men it sent to the field, and the general manner in which the citizens turned out to assist in the memorial day exercises shows that neither the dead nor the living patriots are forgotten.

THE League of American Wheelmen is having a very warm rebellion on its hands, as a result of pronouncing as professionals some of the leading amateurs in the country. The Lynn, Springfield and Hartford clubs hold large racing meetings and if the best riders are barred out, the meetings will be financial failures. The League cares nothing for that, but it is determined to stand by the stupid decisions of its racing board. The result is that the American Cyclist's Union has been formed, of members such clubs as the Nonantum of this city, the Lynn and the Springfield, and they have appointed a committee of which J. H. Lewis of Newtonville is one, to draft a constitution and by laws. The union will protect the men who have been expelled from the League, and the Lynn club showed its intentions by accepting the entries of the makers' amateurs. The league has retorted by suspending all who took part in the Lynn races, and evidently there will be plenty of music for some time to come among the disciples of the wheel. It is said that hereafter there will be no clubs to join the league as a body, and that most of those now in will withdraw. Individuals can remain in the league, however, and some may continue to join, if they think it worth while to pay the fees.

THE President is married at last and the managers of the papers must feel relieved. The affair was conducted so quietly that it was difficult to supply the columns of stuff which the public was understood to desire, and this explains the bosh and twaddle that has been published. When no facts were to be got hold of, the reporters had to depend upon their imaginations, and the same must have been the case with the artists who furnished the illustrations of the wedding, which appeared in some papers the next morning after the great event. Nevertheless the President and his bride displayed great good sense, their position being made an exceptionally difficult one, as no President had ever been married before at the White House during his term of office, and there were no precedents to fall back upon.

ONE of the New York religious newspapers recently discovered a poem by Miss Cleveland, written when she was a school girl, and published it as an original contribution. The act was a fraud upon the public, and has subjected the lady to a good deal of severe criticism, as the poem dealt with the subject of love and marriage and was rather crudely expressed.

THE western part of the state seems to be in favor of Crapo for Governor, although not much interest is as yet felt in the matter. The nomination of Mr. Ames is regarded as a foregone conclusion in that section and they are ready to vote for him. The admiration of Mr. Crapo is purely intellectual or sentimental, according to one correspondent, which means, we suppose, that he has no crowd of workers out, trying to manufacture a spontaneous public sentiment in his favor.

COUNTY Treasurer Hayden, who is also half owner of the Somerville Journal, has been offered the business management of the Boston Post. He has been so successful with the Journal that it was thought that he could make the Post again a success. Nevertheless Mr. Hayden is in the right place now, and neither the people of Somerville nor the county can spare him.

We hope next week to give a summary of the remarkable letter by Prof. E. N. Horsford to the Geographical Society, relating to the discovery of America by Cabot.

To Be a Second Mayor Doyle.

(Boston Gazette.)

One of the Newton weekly papers, said to be acting in the interests of an opposition candidate, has stated that Mayor Kimball of that city will not be a candidate for the position of Mayor again. We understand that this is not correct, and that the friends of Mayor Kimball propose to run him for the fourth time this fall. In fact, they mean to make a second Mayor Doyle of him.

The Hospital Dedication.

The Newton Cottage Hospital will be formally opened at 3.30 p. m., Saturday, June 5. The Hon. R. M. Pulsifer will deliver the address, and the Rev. Dr. G. W. Shinn will offer the prayer of dedication. The trustees will show the different parts of the building to the visitors. All trains on the Circuit road will stop at Woodland station that afternoon, going and returning. A circular has been issued giving the officers of the corporation, the medical staff and their time of service, the consulting physicians, the executive committee, and the regulations to be observed in admitting patients, and their treatment. Applicants for admission must present to the Matron a card signed by a member of the Medical Staff, and endorsed by a member of the Executive Committee.

A Drill Shed.

The Public Property Committee are considering the plan of building a drill shed near the High School building for military drills and other occasions when a large hall is needed. The necessity for such a building is apparent, if drills are to be continued to any advantage during the winter months. Architect Kenway has submitted plans, which have been looked over and discussed at the meetings of the committee, and there is a prospect that something will be done at an early date. The plans give a drill room some 130 by 65 feet, with committee rooms, offices, etc., outside of the main hall, but connected with it. The estimated cost of the first plan was $10,000, and it is not probable that a substantial building, in any way suited to the purpose, can be built for much less. It will not be worth while to put up a building unless it is well built and durable, and the design is to have a good one. It is probable that the particulars can be announced in a week or two. The news that such a building is contemplated will be welcome to all interested in the High School.

The Athletics never more fully realized the truth of the old refrain, "There is no place like home," than they did on Memorial day, after getting defeated by the Holliston Base Ball Club at Holliston. They found that they can do better work on the grounds they are used to, and before crowds in which friendly faces loom up to cheer them on to victory. Pond's curves proved an insurmountable obstacle to the Athletics, Turner being the only man who was able to solve the intricacies of the Holliston Mascot. Nevertheless, had Keefe pitched with his usual effectiveness, the Athletics would certainly have made a better showing. The fielding of Charlton and Farrell was superb, they making no less than five difficult catches after hard runs. The score:

Innings — 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9
Athletics — 3 0 0 1 0 0 1 0 1—6
Holliston — 2 0 1 5 7 1 0 3 2—21

Boston University Class Day.

The senior class of the College of Liberal Arts of the Boston University held its class-day exercises Monday afternoon on the beautiful grounds surrounding the residence of ex-Governor Claflin of Newtonville. A large tent had been provided on the lawn, and the exercises consisted of a class-day poem by Miss Alice L. Heath, and an oration by Mr. L. H. Dorchester. After the exercises the class tree was planted to commemorate the occasion. The graduating class comprises twenty-two members. Among those present were ex-Governor Claflin and wife, Dr. W. E. Huntington, dean of the College of Liberal Arts; Professors Bawne, Lindsay, Coit, Dorchester and Buck of the university; Miss Whiting of Wellesley College, Mrs. Warren, Dr. Twombly, Dr. Pierce and Ex-Mayor Alden Speare. The class officers were: Miss A. S. Bridges, president; Mr. L. H. Dorchester, vice president; Miss Grace Watson, treasurer; Mr. J. C. Ferguson, secretary. Music was furnished by Buffum's orchestra.

THE MEMORIAL SERVICES.

FINE WEATHER AND A WELL EXECUTED PROGRAM.

The weather was all that could have been desired for Memorial Day, and the exercises were of a character befitting such a day. The arrangements were all carried out without a hitch of any kind. In the morning the graves of comrades in the cemeteries at Newton Centre, the Highlands and Lower Falls were decorated with flags and flowers by a detachment of the post, accompanied by Carter's Band; and as one o'clock approached, Newtonville became the centre towards which a great crowd of people directed their steps. Nearly all the houses there displayed flags at half mast, and, as the hour for the beginning of the formal exercises of the day arrived, the Central Congregational church was comfortably filled. Charles Ward Post had seats directly in front of the pulpit, and the members of the city government and invited guests occupied the wing.

Among the noticeable gentlemen present was Mr. Seth Davis, who has the honor of being the oldest resident of Newton, he being 98 years old. He also rode in the procession the entire route.

The exercises at the church opened with an organ voluntary by the organist, after which the audience sang a patriotic hymn, and Rev. Mr. Holway of the Methodist church at Newtonville offered prayer. Comrade Sylvester then introduced Alderman Samuel L. Powers, the orator of the day, and he was received with hearty applause. The oration was one of the best of memorial day addresses, and is so full of interest that it is published entire on another page. After the address the procession was formed, the Post being escorted by four companies of the Fifth Regiment—the Clavin Guards, Charlestown Cadets, Charlestown City Guards, and Cambridge City Guards, and the High School battalion under command of Capt. I. H. Houghton, acting major. The rear of the procession was brought up by a long line of members of the City Government in hacks, and a great number of private citizens in carriages. The streets through which the procession passed on its way to Newton Cemetery were lined with citizens on foot, and certainly the interest in Memorial Day never seemed greater. At Newton cemetery the band formed around the soldier's monument, and the Post decorated the graves to appropriate music. At the conclusion, the line re-formed and marched to the front of the chapel, where Chaplain Chase offered prayer, and flowers were heaped up in memory of the unknown dead.

The procession then re-formed and marched through Newton Centre, where, in accordance with ancient custom Messrs. Davis and Webster had established a lemonade fountain in front of their residences, and numerous girls and boys served it out to the men in the ranks. The route then lay down Centre street to Newton, and ended at Farlow Park, where the Chief Marshal and his staff dismounted, and a great crowd of citizens gathered to witness the dress parade. The sight was a fine one, the militia and the High School battalion being formed in line and going through the manual at the word of Adjutant Fiske. It reminded the veterans of different scenes in more warlike days, when the drill meant a preparation for serious work. The chief attention was of course given to the High School boys and to Adjutant Fiske, who has just only ceased being a High School boy. Certainly none of the citizens, as they beheld the upright bearing of the boys, their prompt obedience and their martial air, could feel any doubt of the benefits of military drill. Adjutant Fiske received many compliments for his brilliant exhibition, and the boys did not compare unfavorably with the militia. Old army officers who witnessed their movements were surprised at the steadiness displayed and the excellent manual. The boys have evidently been in good hands, and have been interested in the work.

After the parade was dismissed, the militia and the High School battalion were given a dinner at Armory hall, while the Post and the Chief Marshal and his aids had a dinner in one of the smaller rooms below. Caterer Tufts of Boston officiated and the dinner was as excellent as it should have been after such a day.

Chamber Concert at Lasell Seminary.

Besides his own work for pupils, Mr. Davis has brought them many opportunities to hear the best players. The concert of June 1st was one of these. To hear Mrs. Sherwood play on an instrument worthy of such gifts as hers is to get an ideal of piano music. Miss V. W. White is a pupil of Mr. Davis, and has a rare quality of voice in good training. Mr. Nowell knows how to make that wondrous violin sing of itself apparently. The three made an evening of choice music for invited guests as well as pupils.

Parliamentary Fund Committee.

The following named committee have been appointed by Mayor Kimball to receive contributions to the Parliamentary fund, in accordance with the resolutions adopted at the Home Rule meeting at West Newton last week:
Edward H. Pierce, George S. Harwood, Charles C. Barton, James T. Allen, Rich. and T. Sullivan, J. Wesley Barber, Isaac F. Kingsbury, George D. Eldridge, Winthrop B. Atherton, P. A. Murray, George E. Johnson.

Cabot-Parker.

The marriage of Miss Elizabeth Lyman Parker, daughter of Col. Francis J. Parker of Newton, and William Brooks Cabot of Brattleboro, Vt., took place Saturday morning at 11 o'clock in Grace Church, in the presence of a large number of relatives and acquaintances. The ceremony was performed by the rector, Rev. Dr. George W. Shinn. The ushers were Charles P. Parker and Edmund M. Parker of Cambridge, Charles T. Davis of Newton, and F. C. Cobb of Boston. Mr. R. M. Bradley of Boston was best man, and the bride was given away by her father. The bridesmaids were: Miss Coolidge of Boston, Miss Sylvester of Hanover, Miss Cabot of Brattleboro, Vt., Miss Gay of Newton, Miss Stedman of Dorchester and Miss Lyman of Chestnut Hill. At the close of the ceremony, a reception followed at the residence of the bride's father on St. James street, which was attended by relatives and a few intimate friends. There was no display of presents. The wedded couple will reside in Omaha.

Supplies for the Hospital.

The board of management of the Cottage Hospital have issued an appeal to the charitable merchants of Newton, in behalf of the hospital. The supplies most needed at present are coal and wood, fruit of all kinds, canned goods, groceries and provisions. As the institution is supported in great part by voluntary contributions, the charitably disposed are invited to send in their gifts, and the smallest contributions will be welcome. Stores which deal in the goods named above, are especially urged to contribute, as the articles are needed at once. If all the dealers in the city send something, the hospital will start off amply provided, and the generous spirit displayed will be appreciated. Lists of the gifts received will be published in the GRAPHIC if the names are furnished. As the hospital opens on Saturday many articles will be needed immediately after that day.

Ward 6 Wants More Police.

To the Editor of the Graphic:—
In the second time in two months, ward 6 was visited last night by burglars, who went into three houses, and to whom there seems to be no clue. Now the question naturally arises, what are our police protections? City Marshal Hammond will answer: there are two night officers on duty in ward 6. Your correspondent would not find any fault with our officers, who are good and efficient men. But what protection can two men give to so large a territory? This ward embraces all that part of Newton, lying between Boston line and the Highlands, on one side, and Brookline line and Sargent street on the other. Here are several square miles for only two men to patrol. Now every one knows it to be impossible for two men to go over this large territory, as they ought to, even once during the night. Yet we are taxed to help pay for maintaining a police department. I desire to ask our city fathers if we are not entitled to what we pay for? If so, we are certainly entitled to more than two officers, for we pay for protection of our property, but we do not and can not get it under the present system. I would ask the city government why we cannot have two more officers for duty nights in this ward. We hope the Mayor and Aldermen will give this matter their immediate attention, and see to it that we have the needed protection.

The Newton Boat Club.

The principal oarsmen of the Newton Boat Club this year are Messrs. Caulkins and Johnson, C. Brown, F. Burdett and G. Brown. A meeting of the club was held last Thursday evening, and a contract was agreed to for the building of a large boat-house at Riverside. The house is to be built by the Newton Boat Club corporation, formed for this purpose, with a capital of $10,000. The corporation leases the house to the boat club. All the stockholders are active members of the club. In the upper story of the new house will be two bowling alleys and a hall measuring 30x40 feet that can be used for dancing and other purposes. There are in the club at present about 150 active members, and 30 private boats are on the rests. At last Thursday evening's meeting it was decided to hold a regatta the last Saturday of June on Charles river, just below Lily Point grove. The events will comprise shell, pleasure boat, canoe and tub races. The following new officers were elected: President, E. E. Hardy of Auburndale; vice-president, C. N. Hubbard of Weston; captain, W. R. Caulkins of Auburndale; treasurer, Winthrop Coffin of Auburndale; secretary, R. F. Herrick of Boston. Next fall a big fair is to be held under the club management.

boiler room each time. The blaze this time was discovered by a passer-by, who gave the alarm, and the prompt response of the firemen prevented serious loss. No. 2 Engine, three hose companies and a truck company responded, and only $100 damage was done. Although the boiler room was well cleaned out and all the boiler connections burned off, the mill was ready for work at 7 o'clock Tuesday morning. The fire is supposed to have originated from sparks from the grate under the boiler.

Kingsbury, a native of this city, but for more than 20 years a resident in the West, where he has been prominently connected in Railroad Circles, has recently been appointed to the important position of Through Freight Agent of the Pennsylvania Railroad, and will remove his residence July 1st, from Columbus, Ohio, to New York City. —The twentieth anniversary of the Baptist Sunday School was appropriately observed last Sunday at three o'clock. The platform was tastefully decorated with cut flowers and pot plants, kindly donated by members of the society. The program consisted of hymns, prayer, reading of scripture, class exercises, annual report, and address by Stephen Moore. The report by the Secretary and Treasurer, Mr. A. L. Barbour, showed the whole number of the school to be 212; officers and teachers 23; scholars, 190; average attendance 141; amount of collection $273.91. The report was a very interesting one and showed the school to be in a flourishing condition. During the exercises the pastor gave the right hand of fellowship to three children. Lillian and Florence Henderson recited the poem "Diligence," and presented the Superintendent, Mr. H. Inman, in behalf of the school, with a handsome French clock. Mr. Inman, who was completely taken by surprise, said that part of the exercises was not down on the program, and in fitting words thanked the school for so generous a gift. Mr. Moore's address was a greeting to the school, and one of instruction to his hearers, all giving the closest attention. The anniversary was one of the best the school has ever had, and it is to be congratulated for so successful a closing of Sunday School work.

High School Notes.

'87 is coming to life with a vengeance.

Chief Marshal Ranlett has written a letter personally congratulating the Battalion on its fine appearance on Decoration Day.

The examinations at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology take place on Thursday and Friday, June 3-4.

The annual prize drill will take place on Saturday, June 19.

School is now dismissed five minutes earlier in order to accommodate those desiring to take the 1.24 train, thus making it necessary to make recess five minutes shorter.

Scholars' tickets on the Boston and Albany have not as yet put in an appearance. It may be of interest in connection with this to state that according to the catalogue of the High School, published in April number of the High School Review, 81 scholars come from Newton, 70 from West Newton, 75 from the Centre, 58 from Newtonville, 43 from Auburndale, 29 from the Highlands, 22 from the Upper and 8 from the Lower Falls, and 11 from other places.

On Decoration Day the N. H. S. Battalion was represented by four companies of sixteen front each, double rank, under command of Major W. Z. Ripley, and was also very ably represented on the staff of the Chief Marshal by Major J. P. B. Fiske, '85. The marching of the boys as a whole was very good, but there is still room for improvement in the keeping of distances, steadier bearing and less awkwardness in the handling of pieces, and the execution of the manual on the march. However, any defects which were found on the march were entirely forgotten in the excellent bearing and general execution in the dress parade. Here the boys excelled the militia. The way in which the hands came down was in some cases almost perfect. In fact the boys did so well that it was the general comment that the left wing presented a much finer appearance than the right. If the boys continue to drill as well as they did May 31, the Prize Drill will be something well worth seeing.

The Bicycle Club of '89 will take a run to Dedham on Saturday, June 5, starting from the High School at 1.30 p. m. If the day should prove to be unpleasant, the run will be postponed. All members of the school desiring to participate should hand their names to the secretary of the club, Walter L. Sanborn, '89.

The class of '87, at a class meeting held at recess on Wednesday, June 2, voted to assess the class $30, to be used in the buying of prize flags for companies at the coming prize drill, and to provide refreshments for the class of '86 and such members of '87 as graduate this year, on Tuesday, June 29.

In class meeting at recess, Thursday, June 3, Mr. Frederic H. Hitchcock was nominated and unanimously elected Editor-in-Chief of the High School Review, Staff of '86-7. Mr. Hitchcock has appointed Mr. Herbert S. Potter, '87, Business Manager for the coming year. Mr. Hitchcock has determined to reserve the power of appointing the editors from the lower classes.

As soon as it was an assured fact that the Prize Drill would be held June 19, the officers of the N. H. S. L. T. C. set energetically to work to make arrangements for the spring tournament. Tickets have been printed, and are ready for sale, notices have been put on the boards announcing that the tournament would take place on the afternoons of June 10 and 11, and on the morning of June 12, at the Richardson street grounds, Newton, and asking that all those desiring to enter do so before Monday, June 7. Already the greater part of the best players in the school have signified their intention of contesting for the various prizes, thus promising close and exciting games, sets and rounds. All those desiring to attend the tournament may do so by paying 20 cents for a ticket for the entire tournament, or 10 cents for a ticket for a single day. Tickets may be obtained at Rogers's Apothecary Store, Centre street, Newton, or of any officer of the club.

The twelfth regular meeting of the High School Lyceum was held at the High School Saturday evening, May 29. The meeting was called to order at 7.30 p. m., President Jones in the chair. The minutes of the last meeting were read, and there being no objection the President declared them approved. The meeting then proceeded with the regular order of business. First on the order was an excellent program of musical selections and reading. The audience showed their appreciation of the rendering of the various selections by several hearty calls for "more," and even after getting "more" they wanted "still more." However we are sorry to say that the audience were once or twice disappointed in not getting more. The reading was well done, and was enthusiastically received. This is a novelty which will bear repeating. After all the selections on the program had been given, the president called for new bills. There were none. The Lyceum proceeded to the regular docket business. The first bill was Bill 7.—"An act to provide for a method of taking the aye and no vote of this society."—R. Calkins. After being slightly amended, the previous question was moved and ordered, and the bill unanimously passed without debate. Next came Bill 8.—"An act to provide for national arbitration in the case of railroad strikes"—W. E. Parson, Secretary of the interior. This bill, as we predicted last week in this column, was warmly debated W. E. Parson Secretary of the Interior opened for the Ministry, and John Cutler for the opposition. The other speakers were Henry Whitmore, Prime Minister; Clinton Eddy, Secretary of the treasury; and Stephen Emery for the Ministry; Herbert S. Potter and James F. Morton for the opposition.

At 9.30 Mr. Cutler having closed for the opposition moved the previous question which was carried. The Ministry now had 10 minutes in which to close the debate. Mr. Morton asked and received 3 minutes. Mr. Morton having ceased, Mr. Parson spoke for a few minutes and resumed his seat. Mr. Whitmore then took the floor and spoke until the expiration of the time allowed. The president put the question, the vote was taken, and the bill announced lost, thus throwing the Conservative Ministry out of office. The vote was, ayes, 17; nays, 28. Mr. Whitmore moved that the president appoint a committee of five to arrange a program for the last meeting. The motion was seconded and carried without debate. Mr. Cutler moved to adjourn, carried, and the meeting was declared adjourned at 9.45. There were present at this meeting 212, or 50 more than any former audience. This shows that the interest is not dying out as it was predicted in the spring, but rather increasing. The fullest, earliest and official accounts of the preparations for the final meeting will be given through this column.

NONANTUM.

—Mr. P. F. Towne is still very low; his condition is such that his friends are feeling quite anxious.

—The last lecture of the course of California Travels by Rev. W. A. Lamb was delivered Friday evening in the North Evangelical Church.

—Dr. Philip Vincent of London has been visiting this village with a view to locating here; he comes with nearly ten years practical experience, and recommendations and certificates innumerable. We hope he will make Nonantum his place of residence.

—A strawberry festival is to be held at the North Evangelical Church next Tuesday evening, when the ladies will do all in their power to make it enjoyable for all who attend. Refreshments, consisting of berries and cream, fruit and ice cream, will be served during the evening. The admission fee has been placed at the small sum of ten cents, and the proceeds are to be devoted to much needed repairs on the church and grounds.

—The 25th anniversary of the Sunday School at Nonantum occurs Sunday, June 6th, and will be celebrated by appropriate exercises. It will be an interesting occasion, as many who have been connected with the work will give an account of special incidents which have occurred. The young people will also assist with appropriate songs and recitations, and Mrs. H. L. Hibbard is to sing a solo. All are invited.

This pond is the enlargement of the pure and never failing "Cheese Cake," near its source. It is secluded, fenced in and supplied with dressing rooms, swimming-post, spring-board, etc. The number of dressing rooms has been doubled, and the depth of the water increased six inches. Arrangements have been made by which the water can be drawn from the bottom during the day, thus raising the temperature several degrees. The sheet of water—5,000 square feet—is divided by a floating boom into two parts for safety, and is from 6 inches to 5½ feet in depth. The record of the last season shows that this pond meets a real want as yet unsupplied by our city, many of both sexes learning to swim therein. The hours assigned to women have been doubled, and swimming lessons for both sexes will be given in the most approved methods. Bathers will wear towels or suits and provide their own towels. Suits and towels, if marked, can be left in care of the attendants, for which a small charge will be made. Strangers may similarly be furnished with towels, etc.

THE NEWTON KNOT.

[Scene at the Boston & Albany Depot, 1879.]

"To Newton, madam. do you wish to go?
Which Newton, pray? there's ten of them, you know.
The Centre, where the weary find a rest?
Or Newton-toward-the-sunset, called the West?
Newtonville? or that newest Newton yet.
Above the rest, on Newton Highlands, set?
Perhaps the Falls? which one? your ticket, please.
Oh, Newton! Madam, that means none of these.
This is the train for Newton; that's to say,
Your ticket calls to go the other way."
"Sir," she replied, "you've Newton on the brain.
If Newton means not Newton, please explain."
"Of course, my lady, that's my business here,
To do my best to make this mystery clear.
Of all the various Newtons reached by rail
E'en Lincoln's men'try has been known to fail.
There's Auburnville, and that's in Newton, too,
And Chestnut Hill, the Reservoir, and view,
And where the malads to the city glide
To do their shopping, we have Riverside.
You're bound for Newton, not some other spot;
Newton is Newton,—then again 'tis not—
The train was starting, and I could not wait,
But left them there, still talking at the gate."

KNOT UNTIED—May 16, 1886.

"Cars ready! on the Newton Circuit track,
For every part of Newton, out and back!
Newton's all right. The crooked kinks made straight."

No need of posturing vaguely at the gate;
No mystery now between the Branch and Main;
No questions asked. No softening of the brain;
Even though memory should by chance to fail,
Scene connections all arranged by rail.
No change of cars, no portages, nor talk;
No weary summons to a country walk.
Way-bills so plain, that he who rides may read,
And safe delivery somewhere guaranteed.
The new Suburban-Garden-City route
Has no side stations to dump greenings out.
Still, if you're set on Newton, and no other spot,
Why Newton is Newton,—but then, alas, 'tis not.

HENRY GEORGE'S BOOK.

"PROTECTION OR FREE TRADE?"—GIVING NEITHER MUCH FAVOR AS THEY ARE NOW UNDERSTOOD.

Henry George has written another book. When the author of "Progress and Poverty" has something to say he commands an audience. Unknown save to a limited number a few years ago, the folly of a superserviceable magistrate in Ireland made his name universally familiar. Arrested on a charge of treason while traveling as an American citizen in Ireland, his release was demanded by our Government, and when Mr. George returned to this country, Secretary Frelinghuysen, with natural tact, invited the injured man to call upon him at the State Department in Washington, received him with distinguished courtesy, and saved the wounded sentiments of Americans by the demonstration. As for Mr. George, his philosophy was undisturbed either by the idiosyncrasy of his arrest or the courtesy of his reception at Washington, though he appreciated both at their value. Meanwhile, the newspaper prominence of these events had aroused a public curiosity in Henry George, and secured him a wider hearing than he had been able to obtain theretofore. This was nowise discreditable to Mr. George. We doubt whether any cause has had a fair hearing in the past quarter of a century that has not owed it to newspaper notoriety of some personal nature.

Henry George had something to tell mankind. He has told part of the story to some thousands, and now, with a constantly widening circle, he enters a somewhat new field, through which he would lead his readers to the same goal as that for which he started in his first bold declaration of humanity's right to happiness.

The fifth and latest work of Henry George in the study of humanity is entitled "Protection or Free Trade?" and it is a discussion of the tariff.

"Near the window by which I write," says the author, "a great bull is tethered by a ring in his nose. Grazing round and round, he has wound his rope around the staff until now he stands a close prisoner, tantalized by rich grass he cannot reach, unable even to toss his head to rid himself of the flies that cluster on his shoulders. Now and again he struggles vainly, and then, after a pitiful bellowing, relapses into silent misery."

"This bull, a very type of massive strength, who, because he has not wit enough to see how he might be free, suffers want in sight of plenty, and is hopelessly preyed upon by weaker creatures, seems to me no unfit emblem of the working masses."

Mr. George relieves the heart of the humane by announcing that he will drive the bull in such a direction that its sufferings will be relieved, and he endeavors in the three hundred and fifty pages following to show the working masses that there is a way by which their misery may be easily relieved. Not, however, by a special providence, such as Mr. George is to the bull in his dooryard; but by their own efforts properly directed. "The little finger of aggregated capital must be thicker than the loins of the working masses so long as they do not know how to use their power."

Mr. George says "in one way or another we must act upon the tariff question," and he proceeds to show that political economy is not a subject which can be relegated to the decision of the few, as we turn over questions in chemistry, in astronomy, or in higher mathematics to the solution of the intellects trained to their consideration. "Political economy is only the economy of human aggregates," he says, requiring for its elucidation that sort of clear thinking which seeks the relations of familiar things and which is as possible for the unlearned as for the learned. It truth, Mr. George means to impress the great majority of non-thinkers with certain principles in which he believes, and he trusts that if these are well-grounded they will sweep away all that lies between themselves and the success of these principles, attaining the goal of happiness to the greatest number, to which he professes to point the way. But he does not think much can be done until the tariff question is settled, and a clear road is made over the debris of existing systems of taxation, with which the tariff is so involved that one cannot survive without the other.

It is time to say that Henry George is a free trader, though the title does not at all express his position as the term is commonly used. He is as far from Mr. Morrison as he is from Mr. Randall, and the Pennsylvania protectionist would not more speedily disavow Mr. George's views than would the Illinois representative of so-called free trade. Mr. George regards England as in no better position than America. A nation that collects a hundred millions of tariff, he says in effect, has no more genuine free trade than a nation that collects three times that sum. We can not attempt to follow Mr. George through the 200 pages in which he attempts to prove the fallacies of protection and of free trade, as they are usually understood. With a wealth of illustration, a careful avoidance of statistical treatment, and a devoted adherence to discussion upon the basis of treatment "by a sort of clear-thinking," as possible for the learned as unlearned," he endeavors to prove that both in Free Trade England and Protectionist America the system of collecting revenue by the tariff produces a favored class in both, and misery to the masses from whom all wealth flows.

Henry George's free trade is, therefore, something that Adam Smith did not admit; something that Cobden did not attempt; something that Mr. Morrison and his set of political hacks have not probably heard of. "The mere abolition of protection—the mere substitution of a revenue tariff for a protective tariff—is such a lame and timorous application of the free-trade principles that it is a misnomer to speak of it as free trade. A revenue tariff is only a somewhat milder restriction on trade than a protective tariff. Free trade, in its true meaning, requires not merely the abolition of protection, but the sweeping away of all tariffs—the abolition of all restrictions (save those imposed in the interests of public health and morals), on the bringing of things into a country or carrying things out of a country."

But free trade cannot logically stop with the abolition of custom-houses. It applies as well to domestic as to foreign trade, and in its true sense requires the abolition of all internal taxes that fall on buying, selling, or transporting, or exchanging, in the making of any transaction or the carrying on of any business.

"Thus the adoption of free trade involves the abolition of all indirect taxation of whatever kind, and the resort to direct taxation for all public revenues. * * * We should abolish as well all direct taxes on things that are the produce of labor."

"There are left (Mr. George), as the only taxes by which, in accordance with the free trade principle, revenue can be raised, these two classes: 1, taxes on ostentation * * * and 2, taxes on the value of land."

The first, Mr. George says, is of no practical importance, and he bases his whole argument upon what the tax on the value of the land alone would produce. So he comes to the same goal as that at which he arrived in Progress and Poverty—the ownership of land to be disturbed; but by placing the taxes upon the valuable land, it would, in fact, become public property. Mr. George goes a long way into the future; but in his travels he deals with problems of the present, and if we cannot follow him with believing eyes we may at least commend the thoroughness with which he scans each step of the path he takes. And thus we find his "Protection or Free Trade" admirable in its methods and style and praiseworthy even in the attacks it makes upon the system which for the present the sound common sense of the nation declares to be best,—for an honesty of criticism is ever to be sought. Those who would see the weaknesses of tariff systems stripped naked and then magnified, who would look incidentally upon a not overdrawn picture of the condition of the "working masses," and would keep informed of what intelligent minds are thinking, would do well to read the book—providing they go on reading other books and pin their faith to no man. For Mr. George is not a prophet nor the son of a prophet; but only an earnest man with views which the world is hardly ready to do more than read about as yet.

New England Thunder Storm Observers.

The Volunteers' Associations of Thunder Storms in New England, instituted by the New England Meteorological Society in co-operation with the United States Signal Service, began Tuesday, June 1, and will be continued through the three summer months. Over three hundred observers are already enlisted, and additional volunteers are still reporting their names, at the rate of ten or twenty a day, so that a good representation of nearly all districts will soon be secured. Persons who are desirous of assisting in the investigation should address the Boston Signal Office, through which correspondence will be carried on, writing "Thunder Storms" on one corner of their envelope. A special feature of the work is found in the appointment, in advance, of certain days, to be called "Term Days," on which thunder storms may be expected in some part of New England, and on which all observers are to make certain systematic records. These "Term Days" will be appointed by the Signal Office in Washington, and the announcement of them will be sent by telegraph to all newspapers in New England belonging to the Associated Press or the United Press. An extended publication will thus be secured, and the appointments will be brought to the notice of all observers. The announcement will generally be printed directly after the Signal Service weather indications, and will be worded about as follows: "Thunder Storm Observations. (Date) is appointed Term Day for Thunder Storm Observers of the New England Meteorological Society."

Cable's Memorial Address.

Geo. W. Cable, the distinguished Southern author, delivered the memorial address at Pittsfield before the W. W. Rockwell Post, G. A. R. His address was substantially as follows:

"The infant born in the first ecstasy of the tidings of peace may this year cast its vote, an adult citizen of the saved Union. The veterans of that great contest are among us still, but their ranks are thinned more by time than they were once by fire and lead, and the youngest is turning gray. They stand with their wives waist deep among their children, and hear those children ask why still, year after year, flowers are laid upon gravestones instead of upon their young brows, and the fairest day of the year is given to funeral celebrations when there are no unburied dead. I know your heart's reply. You say it is thus you feed the light of your common gratitude with the beaten oil of memory, and that it is meet to pour the fairest day of the year as a libation upon the graves of those who died for the safety, unity, freedom and peace of our land. But the children ask how long? When shall there be an end? And you can only tell them: not until all the war's lessons are learned and all its good fruit are gathered by the nation. That time has not come. The dead of both hosts have somewhat yet to teach us—charges to lay upon us still. If I guess aright, it is in recognition of this fact that you have chosen to-day to re-kindle your memories a man from the ranks who sought to multiply the graves you keep green. Thus, I take it, you confess there is still something to be learned that can be learned best when those who survive the strife join hands once lifted against each other's lives, and exchange counsels in an hour and place where animosities are impossible. I say the dead of both opposing hosts; why not, for I know you believe now that those whom you once fought strove sincerely, as they died gallantly, for what they esteemed their country's welfare and their right. They, though dead, yet cry to us, 'Prove all things, hold fast to that which is good.' They charge us in the better light of this latter day and of each other's counsels, 'Sift right from wrong at any cost.' This common charge comes to us from the sod of both Grand Armies, that are all the grander because they are dead and buried." Mr. Cable then proceeded to show that the war had great issues, was founded in the existence of grave errors, and both sides would be alike recreant to their dead if they did not see to it that not merely the animosities of the war were entirely obliterated, but that also its issues be finally settled by the destruction of everything that was wrong, and the establishment of everything that was right, for which the war was fought. "Time has brought us this great advantage," he said, "that wrath has ceased, and that its re-creation is now scarcely heard, and each side is prepared fully to believe that the other fought the war in the sincere conviction that it was in the right. It is, therefore, necessary as a simple duty to all the sacrifice of treasure and life made in the war that we should make such amicable comparison of one another's position in the matter as will enable both sides at once to see where error lies, and wherein lies its cure." The speaker then entered upon a searching and exhaustive analysis of the southern question from the point of common agreement between North and South, tracing the divergence of view and its results upon the general connections of each side as to the fundamental necessities of social order and safety. "No wonder," he said, "the two sides fought so well when each was fighting under the strong conviction that it was struggling for self-preservation. You may say we ought to have been better grounded in American principles. I decline to argue that. I am discussing not what ought to have been on either side, but what was and is, and you see now the fact the difference between us is not that we had a war 20 years ago, and cannot forget its passions. They are forgotten. Nor because we had slaves, and you emancipated them. We are glad of it. Nor because you loved the negro more than you do other men. There are those in the South who doubt if you care as much for him as you might. But the difference is because you wanted us to find our self-preservation in one principle of the government, and our traditions led us to seek it in just the opposite. There is not necessarily on either side either resentment or malice, or inexplicable perversity or love of tyranny, or any wish to be unfair, but only an utterly harmonious discord of sincere belief as to what is requisite to public safety." Mr. Cable then went on to explain the difference between the northern and southern idea of the safety of society; that which preponderates in the North resting on the principle that society is safest when the government is of and by and for the people, and necessitates the elevation of the masses; while that which predominates at the South regards the safety of society as requiring the arbitrary supremacy of an enlightened ruling class, or the subjugation of the masses. "The task before the nation," he said, "is to convince the ultra-southern men that this latter idea has been proved by the world's experience to be as unsafe as it is heretical to American principles of government."

The speaker concluded as follows: "This is the last day of spring; the year passes from maidenhood to the wedding altar. Nature yields to the wooing of the husbandman and is his for better or worse. All its beauty and grace, joy, hope, and gentle benignant life. I charge you by this day, with all it means in nature and in memory, by all its promises of a fruitful future, by all the beauty and bounty and abundance of our great land, by the precepts of our revolutionary fathers, northern and southern, and by the death of every man who died, and the blood of all whose blood has been shed, by southern hands or northern, that you give your minds, your hearts, your hands to the establishment throughout all our borders of one government, one law, one citizenship for all. When that is done, you need come no more to the patriot's grave, for then shall his rest be perfect and the perfection of the nation's honor and strength be his enduring monument."

EXCURSION TO ROBIN'S HILL, CHELMSFORD

In spite of sultry and threatening weather a party of sixty, under the leadership of Vice-President Mann and J. A. Crosby, left the Boston & Lowell station at 11 a. m. Saturday, for Robin's Hill. The cars furnished for the trip, fitted with the Ober ventilator, were very comfortable, even with closed windows; the advantage of this new ventilator being that each passenger regulates his own supply, and the air being driven through a water tank before entering the car, is cool and entirely free from dust and cinders. The route was by way of Woburn and Tewksbury, reaching Chelmsford Centre, at 12.30. A little over a mile of country road with a halt at the handsome residence of A. B. Woodworth, Esq., overlooking Lowell four miles away, and a short farther climb through fields carpeted with houstonia and bird's-foot violets, I brought the party to the summit. Prospect and Nobscot Hills were the most distant points visible, as the atmosphere was still very misty. A mounted disk whose radii bore the names of such hills as can be seen in clear weather made the identification easy. The return, led by Messrs. Woodworth, Parkhurst and Symonds of Chelmsford was by field and wood paths, to visit the old kiln and quarry, abandoned now, not from lack of material, but because less than $2.00 a barrel will not pay cost of labor and transportation of the lime. A pause was made in the cemetery to examine some quaint old stones, whose epitaphs could at least claim originality. We noticed the date 1690 upon the oldest. Well laden with woodland treasures, though longing eyes were turned upon the bogs, rose-flushed with rhodora, and gravel-banks purpled with ranks of lupine, as the express sped past, the party arrived in Boston at 5.30. HEREDITARY SCROFULA.

ARE you aware that in your blood the taint of scrofula has a prominent place? This is true of every one. It is liable at any time, on the slightest provocation, to develop itself in some insidious disease. Consumption and many other diseases are outgrowths of this impurity of the blood. HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA has a wonderful power over all scrofulous troubles, as the remarkable testimonials we have received unmistakably prove.

Messrs. C. I. HOOD & Co.: Gentlemen—My youngest son has always been troubled with Scrofulous Humor; sores in his head discharging from his ears, and a running sore on the back of his ear for two years; his eyelids would fester and ulcerate, discharging so that I was obliged to wash them open every morning. His eyelashes nearly all coming out; he was exceedingly dainty, most of the time eating but two slight meals a day. We were unable to find anything that had the least effect upon him till last spring, 1876, we gave him two bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla. His appetite improved at once. The back of his ear healed up without a scar, and not a sore in his head since. Sincerely yours, Mrs. N. C. SANBORN, No. 103 Merrimack St., Lowell, Mass.

"We do not as a rule allow ourselves to use our editorial columns to speak of any remedy we advertise, but we feel warranted in saying a word for Hood's Sarsaparilla. Sarsaparilla has been known as a remedial agent for centuries and is recognized by all schools of practice as a valuable blood purifier. It is put up in forms of almost infinite variety, but Messrs. Hood & Co. (Lowell, Mass.) who are thoroughly reliable pharmacists, have hit upon a remedy of unusual value. Certainly they have vouchers of cures which we know to be most extraordinary."—Editors Lowell Weekly Journal.

Persons holding Estates in trust, whether for minors or otherwise, are particularly requested to furnish the Assessors with statements in relation to such estates.

When estates of persons deceased have been divided during the past year, or have changed hands from other causes, the Executors, Administrators, Trustees or other persons interested, are required and warned to give notice of such change; and in default of such notice will be held to pay the tax assessed, although such estate has been wholly distributed and paid over.

An Act in Relation to the Assessment and Registration of Women as Voters.

In the months of May and June of each year, the Assessors or Assistant Assessors of taxes shall visit each dwelling house in their respective cities, and receive from all women who personally or in writing express to the Assessor or Assistant Assessor a desire to be assessed for a poll tax, together with their occupation and age, as near as may be.

Returns of Property Held for Literary, Benevolent, Charitable or Scientific Purposes.

In accordance with the requirements of Chapter 217, Acts of 1882.—All persons and corporations are hereby required to bring in to the Assessors of Newton on any day from May first to the twelfth day of June next, true lists of all real and personal estate held by such persons and corporations, respectively, for literary, benevolent, charitable or scientific purposes, on the first day of May, 1886, together with statements of the amount of all receipts and expenditures by such person or corporation for said purpose during the year next preceding said first day of May; such lists and statements to be in such detail as may be required by the Tax Commission.

Mortgaged Real Estate.

CHAP. 175, ACTS OF 1882, SECT. 1.

Any mortgagor or mortgagee of Real Estate may bring in to the Assessors of the town or city where such Real Estate lies, at the time specified for bringing in the list as provided in section thirty-eight of chapter eleven of the Public Statutes, a statement under oath, of the amount due on each separate lot or parcel of such Real Estate, and the name and residence of every holder of an interest therein as a mortgagor or mortgagee. When such property is situated in two or more places, or when a recorded mortgage includes for one sum two or more estates or parts of an estate, an estimate of the amount of the mortgagee's interests in each estate or part of an estate shall be given in such statement. The Assessors shall, from such statements or otherwise, ascertain the proportionate parts of such estates that are the interests of mortgagors and mortgagees, respectively, and shall assess the same. Whenever, in any case of mortgaged Real Estate, a statement is not brought in as herein provided, no tax for the then current year on such Real Estate shall be invalidated for the reason that a mortgagee's interest therein has not been assessed to him.

Shipping.

Shipping and business income are not taxable to a firm, but each resident partner must include these items in his individual return. Owners and agents of ships and vessels engaged in the foreign carrying trade, are referred to Sections 8 and 9, of Chapter 11 of the Public Statutes, for the form of return required to obtain exemption from taxation upon the valuation of such property.

Any person bringing in a list of all his taxable personal property will be assessed upon the valuation thereof, and any person neglecting to furnish the Assessors with such list within the time above specified, will be deemed at a legal meeting of the Board of Assessors agreeably to the laws of this Commonwealth.

All persons will take notice that statements of Personal Property must be in writing and subscribed under oath before one of the Assessors, on or before the twelfth day of June, and that the Personal Property of all taxable persons must be estimated by the Board, notwithstanding any verbal statement or informal written communication to any one or more of the Assessors.—Pub. Stat. Chap. 11, Sec. 39 and 41. When a person has failed to bring in a list or schedule of all his taxable property, in conformity to this notice, no abatement of a tax assessed on Personal estate to such person, can be granted, unless such tax exceeds by more than fifty per cent. the amount which would have been assessed to that person on Personal Estate if he had seasonably brought in said list; and if said tax exceeds by more than fifty per cent. the said amount, the statement shall be only of the excess above the said fifty per cent.—Pub. Statutes, Chap. 11, Sec. 73.

The Assessors will be in session at their office, in the City Hall, in the City of Newton, on the 1st, 8th, 15th, 22nd and 29th days of May, and the 5th and 12th days of June next, from two to five o'clock P. M.

INCURABLE, BUT HARMLESS.

The jester sat on the coral rocks
A-combing his sea green hair,
He fastened his trunk with his flowing locks
For his gait was out of repair.
And he told his time by his brodered socks,
That were clocked so deftly and fair.

His thoughts, the winds and the skies were blue,
'Twas the kitchen thyme of day;
He softly sighed, "There was nothing gnu,"
When the circus went away.
So he sailed away with his good corks crew,
More'n half way over the bay.

He played all day with his leathern pie
His dog and his trusty mule,
There stood no tiers in his laughing eye,
For he never went to school,
And all that he knew of the how and why
He learned by the good Miss Rule.

For him the cyclone sang its song,
For him was the apple green;
For him the hair and the butter strong,
And the ice cream garden scene;
And the boarding house, and the dinner gong,
And the fiftful kerosene.

HEBREW WISDOM.

SELECTIONS FROM THE MANUSCRIPTS OF RABBI KALISCH.

Among the manuscripts found after the death of Rabbi Kalisch are some very interesting extracts from the Jewish Talmud, which is a collection of remarkable sayings and writings of the rabbis, contemporaneous with the date of the Christian era. Rabbi Hillel was one of the first Jews who made any exegetical remarks on the Bible, and lectured in Jerusalem. Some of his sayings were published in the eleventh century. The Talmud was written in Hebrew, Greek, Chaldaic, Phœnician, Latin and other languages. It has never all been translated into English. Some years ago Appleton & Co. asked Rabbi Kalisch to translate the work for them. He wanted $5,000 a year for his work, but when it was found that it would cost $200,000 to publish the work, Appleton & Co abandoned the idea.

The following are some extracts from Hillel's proverbs:—

Be of the disciples of Aaron, loving and pursuing peace; loving mankind and bringing them to the study of the law.

He who is ambitious of magnifying his name, destroyeth his name, and he who doth not increase his knowledge, diminisheth it; and he who doth not study the law deserves death; and whoseever useth for himself the crown of the law will perish.

If I do not act for myself who can do it for me? When I am alone by myself what am I? If I act not now, when shall I?

The rude man feareth not sin; the ignorant can be no pious; the bashful can not become learned, nor the passionate be a teacher; nor will he who is mostly engaged in commerce become wiser.

In a place where there are no eminent men, endeavor thou to become eminent.

In another portion of the Talmud the following fable occurs:—

THE FOX AND FISHES.

A fox was walking on the bank on a river, and observed that there was a great commotion among the fishes therein. They were swimming uneasily to and fro. He asked them: "Why are you so restless, to-day, by whom are you pursued?" They answered, "We want to escape the perils of nets and hooks which were thrown out to catch us." "Then," said the fox, "I pity you, my dear ones, but I will teach you now what you have to do in order to be preserved. Come to me on dry land, where we will lead a happy life together." But they said: "Art thou the same beast that is regarded by all as the wisest among brutes? Thou seemest not to be wise at all, but a fool. If we are in danger of losing our lives in the water, our natural element of life, how much more dangerous would it be for us to be on dry land, where we could not exist at all?" "This," said Akiba (a teacher), "is exactly the case with us in these times of persecution. If danger and trouble threaten us, even when we are studying the Holy Scriptures, which are the means of a happy existence, and the source of a happy life, how much more are we exposed to all kinds of trouble and woe if we neglect to study our holy books?"

In the work special reference is made to the axiom: "Envy, unbridled passion and misanthropy cause the death of a nation." Rabbi Joshua, who taught this maxim, distinguished himself by his piety as well as by his wit, so that he became a favorite at the imperial court of Rome; but they sometimes made him the butt of their raillery on account of his ugliness. A princess once asked him: "How does it come that an excellent mind lodges often in an ugly body?"

"Why," he replied, "does your father keep his best wine in earthen jars, and not in vessels of gold and silver?"

The princess ordered at once that vessels of gold and silver be filled with the best wine, but it soon grew sour. The emperor, who heard the story, then remarked that he knew many excellent men who were handsome, too, but that they would be still more excellent if they were less handsome."

It is related that a caviling heathen, an acquaintance of Rabbi Gamahiel, once said to him: "If your God, as you assert, is the source of all righteousness, why did He steal a rib from the first man when asleep, as stated in Genesis?"

The amiable and accomplished daughter of Gamahiel, who happened to be present, requested her father for the permission to set this infidel to rights. "Well, do so, my dear," answered Gamahiel.

She then addressed the heathen and said: "Sir, before arguing the subject, will you have the kindness to do me a favor by calling in a justice of the peace?" "Why," said he, "for what purpose?" She then rejoined: "Some robbers invaded our house last night, purloined a silver goblet, and replaced it by a gold one."

"Is that all," asked the heathen. "I would wish that my house might be pillaged in such a manner every day."

"Well," said she, "if you are of such an opinion, you will probably coincide with me that it was much better for Adam to receive for one rib a beautiful companion for his whole life, who would share his pleasures and woes, and would nourish him faithfully when old and infirm."

"I admit that," said the caviler, "but I would like to know why God made him unconscious when He performed for him the sweetest blessing of his existence?"

She then remarked: "I will answer your question, but, before all things, get me a piece of raw meat." He did her bidding with alacrity. She at once took it, washed, salted, clubbed and roasted it in his presence; then she asked him if he would like to have a slice of it; but he declined, declaring that he would have had some appetite if he had not witnessed the dressing of it.

"Well," she reiterated, "exactly so was the case with the first man. If he would have seen how God formed Eve, he might not have liked her so well as when she stood before him, graced with womanly loveliness and beauty."

TWO AUTHORS.

E. E. Stedman and Frank R. Stockton.

The visitor to the long room of the stock Exchange, New York, may notice among the throng of shouting brokers a slightly built, wiry-looking gentleman with gray whiskers and a keen but kindly face, who seems for the time a typical Wall street broker, yet who has won distinction as one of the best of literary critics, one of the most polished writers of prose, and one of the poets who take rank with James Russell Lowell, only a step below Longfellow, Whittier, Emerson, and Holmes. It is Edmund Clarence Stedman. For years he was a successful stock broker, accumulating quite a comfortable competence, an amount, in fact, which before the civil war would have been considered an ample fortune. A few years ago he met with reverses, not through his own lack of business skill, but through the ventures of one of his sons.

He met his obligations manfully; there was no attempt at evasion, no thought of imitating some of the operators of New York and Chicago who, when driven into a corner, have contrived dubious short cuts to financial rehabilitation. He comes downtown daily to his office at No. 64 Broadway, and is regular in his attendance at the Stock Exchange. Meeting him casually in the business quarter, and conversing with him on the financial topics of the day, the poet is veiled and to the only broker, the alert, well-informed broker, appears, and the stranger would learn with surprise that the energetic gentleman with sparkling gray eyes, who talks of stocks and bonds, of strikes, pools, and railroad earnings, is the poet Stedman.

Born in Hartford, Conn., he is now in his fifty-third year, but he looks some years younger. He entered Yale College in 1849, but was suspended for some of those pranks in which young collegians are wont to indulge. Twenty years afterward he was restored to his class, and received the degree of A. M. Dartmouth College also conferred the same degree upon him. In 1854 he became the editor of the Winsted (Conn.) Herald; in 1859 he was one of the staff of the New York Tribune; in the following year he became one of the editors of the New York World, and from 1861 to 1863 he acted as a correspondent for that journal. His work won the warm commendation of Henry J. Raymond. For a time he was a stock-holder in the World, but he found that during his absence as a correspondent that he had been "reorganized" out of his stock. The story of this transaction would make interesting reading. His most important works are "The Victorian Poets," "Poems, Lyrics and Idylls," "The Battle of Bull Run," "Alice of Monmouth," "The Blameless Prince," "Poetical Works," "Poets of America." Among the poems which he has composed for special occasions and read before great gatherings of people are: "Gettysburg," "Dartmouth," "The Monument of Greeley," "Hawthorne," "Meridian," "The Death of Bryant," "Corda Concordia." He formerly lived in West Fifty-fourth street, and his home there was, in some respects, one of the most attractive in New York. Though being one of a long stretch of brown-stone houses, it was without the architectural pretensions of some of the domestic palaces of the city.

But there were pictures, statuary and books; there color, warmth and grace; there, there were rich draperies, soft-toned carpets, rare bits of bric-a-brac, a beautiful collection of iridescent Venetian glass, landscapes in which the rich green trees seem to rustle and figures instinct with life. A wealth of books laden the tables and shelves, and among them is Mrs. Browning's own copy of "Casa Guidi Windows." For several years, or since Mr. Stedman met his financial reverses, this home has been leased, and now he lives in East Thirtieth street, in the old home of Bayard Taylor. Here the man of business suddenly changes to the poet. His study is on the first floor, and is a good sized room filled with books, some in cases along the walls, others on tables or on the floor; there is what may perhaps be termed a poetical negligé about the apartment—a confusion of books, magazines, journals and memoranda which, with a bright grate fire in the marble fireplace on cool nights, make it a veritable literary snuggery.

Frank R. Stockton is 52 years of age and a Philadelphian by birth. Years ago he wrote fairy tales for the Riverside Magazine of Boston and contributed to Vanity Fair and Punchinello. He went back to Philadelphia and became one of the editors of a newspaper there, and still later became connected with the Hearst and Home, then joined the editorial staff of Scribner's relinquishing this post to become assistant editor of the St. Nicholas. In the intervals of his editorial labors he wrote short stories and some serial tales, the latter designed for juvenile readers. Then he wrote the "Rudder Grange." In 1879 the Scribners issued a volume of his various productions. In 1881 he relinquished all editorial work and devoted himself to literature in the strictest sense. Since then he has written "The Lady or the Tiger?" "A Tale of Negative Gravity," "The Remarkable Wreck of the Thomas Hyke," "A Story of Assisted Fate," "The Discourager of Hesitancy," and "The Late Mrs. Null." In recent years he has spent considerable time in Virginia, Florida, and Europe, but for the most part he has resided in or near New York. He is now devoting himself entirely to the writing of novels. His stories are generally written in a vein of fine humor, and have a polish of style and brilliancy of diction that make him one of the best of living American writers of fiction. The visitor to his study on the sixth floor of one of the lofty New York hotels sees a gentleman of very quiet, almost languid, manners, under the medium height, and slightly built, with dark brown eyes and a black mustache slightly touched with frosty indications of middle life. He does most of his writing in the forenoon, he takes his recreation, as a rule, in the afternoon or the evening. His manners are polished and courteous, but there is little at first to indicate the brilliant author of "The Lady or the Tiger?" It is at first difficult to realize that this quiet gentleman, who rises from his work at a plain, commercial-looking desk, is the fine humorist that his productions show him to be, and not a business man who has been interrupted in the midst of some intricate calculations. The handsomely furnished room in which he works is as orderly as the most fastidious could desire. There is none of the literary confusion that one is wont to associate with literary men. And here, far above the tinkling bells and the hum of multitudinous life around him, our author sets and weaves delicate fancies that have charmed so many.

—Over one thousand tickets were sold at the Chestnut Hill station, Memorial Day, and trains both ways were crowded.

—The triangle at the junction of Centre and Ward streets has been very neatly laid out and seeded down by the Improvement Society.

—On the march on Monday the veterans and military were served with lemonade by friends; a halt being made at the corner of Beacon street and Lake avenue.

—The tomb of General William Hull in the Centre street cemetery was decorated with flags and flowers. He served in the Revolutionary War, and in the war of 1812.

—The league of American wheelmen made a fine display on Friday afternoon as they passed the Common en route for Echo Bridge. There were over two hundred riders, all well mounted on all varieties of "bi's and tri's."

—The Freeland estate, corner of Centre and Sargent streets, has been recently purchased and occupied by Mr. Brooks of Commonwealth avenue, Boston. On his lawn are two beds of rhododendrons in full bloom, finely assorted.

—The tenth anniversary of the class of 1876 of the Newton Theological Institution will be held at the United States Hotel, Boston, on Wednesday, June 9th. Class greetings at 11 a.m., Dinner at 12 m., when further announcements as to program of exercises will be made.

—Mrs. Barakat of the Syrian Mission of the American Board, spoke in Rev. Mr. Holmes's church on Sunday afternoon. The address was one of great power. The thrilling story of the speaker's life and her conversion held the audience spell-bound nearly two hours.

—Next Sunday the second Baptist Church will hold their Children's Day. Sermon to the children in the morning at half past ten, by the pastor; singing by the Sunday School. A concert will be given in the evening, begun by a praise service, using the Gospel Hymns led by the pastor, with Rand's orchestra, of a half an hour. Concert exercises by Sunday School, Mr. Fred Emerson, leader. A collection will be taken to defray expenses. All are cordially invited.

—"Dinna ye hear it." So said the patiently waiting crowds on Memorial Day, as they listened for the martial music near and around the flag-staff on the Common. The grass had been neatly trimmed, the shrubs were in bloom, and the work of the Improvement Society recalled by contrast the former state of this old military campus. It was given to the town in or before 1711, by Jonathan Hyde and Elder Wiswall. In 1799 a powder house was built on the easterly side of it, which remained there half a century.

—On Sunday morning the Charles Ward Post, No. 62, attended divine service at the First Church. Rev. T. J. Holmes preached the text, "This shall be for a memorial of them," an impressive and effective sermon. Sergeant Major Charles Ward was a member of this church, as had been his ancestors for generations. He inherited the military spirit and patriotism of Col. Joseph Ward of 1776, who was honored and promoted for his bravery at Bunker Hill. Sergeant Ward, whose name the Post bears, enlisted in the dark battle-summer of 1862, when the gloom was heavy on the country. He joined Co. K, 32d Mass., Col. Edmonds. At the battle of Gettysburg, this gallant regiment sustained a heavy charge, and stood like a rock. Here Sergeant Ward fell mortally wounded; he was carried from the field, and lingered for a few days, and in less than a year from the time of his enlistment, he was brought home and buried with all honor from his own church. We can have little idea of the bitterness of those days, and we do well to honor those gallant men who now represent to us that grand army which marched into history and immortality.

—On Saturday evening, May 29th, there was celebrated at the residence of Hon. J. F. C. Hyde, the silver wedding of the host and hostess, also that of Mrs. Hyde's brother and wife, Mr. and Mrs. William Ward of Lowell. The invitations included a request for no gifts. There was a large and joyous gathering of relatives, in number such as only a family that has for several generations intermarried among its own town-folks is able to assemble. The first mention of the name of Hyde in Newton annals is 1640, being the second settler in the town, Deacon Samuel Hyde of London, Eng., who came here at the age of thirty-three years, and lived to be seventy-five. The Indian title deeds given to the family are still in their possession. Dr. S. F. Smith in his "History of Newton," mentions twenty-three persons of the name of Hyde who have borne their part in her history; of these, the present head of the house well adorns the name, having served the town, the city, the church, and the state, in public offices of trust, in behalf of temperance, education, and charity, in the formation of the Public Library, as first Mayor of Newton, as President of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, and member of the State Board of Agriculture and as a prime factor in the girdling of our city with a path for the locomotive.

—For fresh salmon and fresh green peas call at Richardson's.

—Those who wish awnings should consult W. Thorpe's advertisement.

—The water department is having stand pipes put up at Chestnut Hill, so that the residents of that vicinity can have their streets watered hereafter.

—Rev. Mr. Norcross of North Conway, N. H., has been spending a week with Dr. Mary E. Bates. Dr. Henry O. Marcy and wife are also her guests.

—Two furnished houses to rent for the warm months, three houses to rent by the year, and five houses for sale at Newton Centre, by W. Thorpe.

—On Centre street, near Mill street, four large elms, nearly a foot in diameter, stand leafless amid all the verdure.

"Oh, dear, what can the matter be?" Is it the fault of the pipes of the Newton and Watertown Gas Company?

—The "Country Week" club earnestly solicits, and will receive on Wednesday afternoon at the residence of Rev. B. K. Pierce, Crescent avenue, contributions of fruit and flowers, in aid of the Boston Fruit and Flower Mission.

—Dr. Mary E. Bates has presented the Newton Cottage Hospital with a large double plated Howe's Water Filterer. The filterer is manufactured by the Sanitary Improvement Company at Spencer, Mass., and is said to be the best ever produced.

—Mr. Arthur Gordon Webster, Beacon street, who graduated with distinction in the class of '85 at Harvard, will sail for Europe in July, for study in Germany. Mr. Webster has been tutor in mathematics at the University, since his graduation.

—Miss Cushman of the Methodist Mission of Pekin, China, spoke on the demands of the idol worshipping Celestials, for more of the truth. Miss Cushman has been abroad eight years. She is a genuine New England lady and interested her audience greatly.

—The anniversaries of the Newton Theological Institution commence on Sunday morning. President Hovey will preach the baccalaureate sermon, to the graduating class. Examinations from Monday, June 7th, 2 p.m., till Wednesday, June 9th, at 4 p.m. Address before the Alumni by E. T. Hazlewood, D. D., on Wednesday, June 9th, at 4 p.m. Address before the Missionary Society by G. C. Lorimer, D. D., on Wednesday, June 9th, at 7.45 p.m. Addresses of the graduating class on Tuesday, June 10th, at 10 a.m.

—On Saturday morning, at half past two o'clock, it was discovered by the family of Mr. Edwin M. Fowle, Lake avenue, that there were burglars in the house; the alarm being given they fled, taking a quantity of solid silver ware. The hall doors had been unlocked by the thieves and the whole lower part of the house searched. The two dogs were drugged. A pistol shot being fired, the police arrived in about ten minutes; search was made, but no clue to the direction taken could be discovered; but the same night an entrance was made at Mr. Franklin N. Thatcher's, Beacon street; here they did not succeed in securing any plunder, but going to Mr. Fewkes, Hyde street, they took fifty dollars in money. These bold crimes lead us to inquire whether our very efficient fire department might not be signalled in such an emergency. This would bring a body of men together in such force as to make a search thorough. All these houses robbed are within a circuit of half a mile; had the first been able to give a general alarm, the damage might have been stopped there. Our Assistant Chief, Mr. Ranlett, has a genius for despatch; on Monday night, when Box 35 sounded an alarm for the fire at Lucas Mill, West Newton, he was heard galloping down Homer street almost before the alarm had fairly finished striking.

Why Mr. Brooks Cannot Accept.

The Rev. W. Nelson McKiever of Philadelphia has received from San Francisco, under date of May 12, a letter from the Rev. Phillips Brooks, declining the office of assistant bishop of that diocese of the Episcopal church. He gives the following reasons for declining:—

My present work, in which I have been long engaged, and to which I am profoundly attached, still, I believe, welcomes and demands my care. I must not leave it, not even for such a useful and important task as I should find the service to which I am invited. There enters into my decision that I must not come to you no small element of regret, but I have no hesitation or doubt with regard to the result to which I have been led. It will always be a source of deep satisfaction to me to think of the honor and confidence with which my brethren in Pennsylvania have regarded me.

Baptist Social Union.

The monthly meeting of the Baptist Social Union was held Monday evening in Boston. The occasion was also a complimentary reception to the graduating class of the Newton Theological Institution, and, beside the members of that school, there were present as guests Rev. Dr. Hovey, president of the institute, Prof. Curry, Prof. English, Prof. Brown, Dr. Lincoln, Dr. Stearns, Prof. Barton, Rev. Mr. Bellamy and Rev. Dr. Webb, president of the Congregational Club. The evening was spent with music by the Ruggles Street Church quartet, and addresses made by Prof. J. M. English, Mr. Richard O. Sherwood, representing the graduating class of the institute, Rev. E. B. Webb, D. D., and Rev. Francis J. Bellamy. Deacon Bowdler of the Dudley Street Baptist Church read a memorial of Rev. Dr. Morse of Roxbury, recently deceased. Two new members, Messrs. Augustus P. Clark, M. D., and J. Hamilton Robinson, were elected members.

NEWTON UPPER FALLS.

—Rev. W. J. Pomfret, formerly pastor of the M. E. Church here, delivered the Memorial day oration at Southbridge.

—Henry Otis Billings, of the straw firm of Emmons & Billings, South Framingham, is about to start on a six weeks' trip to Europe, combining business with pleasure.

—The Boston common council, water board and guests visited the sources of the Cochituate and Sudbury river water supply, Wednesday, and returned by way of Echo bridge, where the Peony quartet tested the echoes.

—Among those who took part in the prize declamations at Boston College, Tuesday evening, was Thomas J. Daily of this village, who ably recited "Toussaint L'Ouverture," by Phillips, and was applauded to the echo.

—The Boat Club has voted to have a grand picnic up river June 17, for which committees have been appointed to prepare for. Among the prominent features of the day will be: The event of the day in the Flag-Dyson race, which will take place in the forenoon, followed by a tub-race, in which President L. P. Everett of the club, C. L. Bird, W. S. Bancroft, G. T. Francis, J. W. C. Easterbrook and Walter Fisher will participate. A race of the fleet will come off at 9 o'clock, a.m.

—Friday was a red letter day with our young ladies, who were out in full ranks to gaze with admiration or horror, as the case may be, upon some two hundred bicyclists who then visited Echo Bridge, from the annual convention of the L. A. W., then in session at Boston. The sighs, oh my's and other feminine exclamations of praise and wonder were then bestowed on no few of those who in knee breeches rode their silent steeds into this at other times almost silent village. Several of them were exceedingly fine-looking "little chappies," while a majority of them would hardly pass muster in an examination for a prize beauty contest at a dime museum for handsome men. As yet no serious results have been recorded, and none of our young men told that their presence would not as heretofore be desired at the vestry door when Sunday evening services are over. Saturday evening came our young men's turn, when this same dear old Echo Bridge drew into its view a bevy of some forty dashing blondes and pert brunettes of all styles of loveliness from a neighboring female college, but our noble young men heeded them not, their fidelity to our own daughters true, and they only cast at this army of smiles, giggles and bustles a passing glance, thus placing themselves on record as stronger and more persistent in their admiration for our own pickle-eaters than the latter were to our true-blue disciples of the base-ball or row-locks of the day previous.

—Our post office is still at its old stand, where for nearly half a century it has satisfied the wants of all our citizens. Our postmasters have always heretofore been considered as the right persons to preside over its affairs. They have always been men adapted to that position by reason of their usual business being such as to allow them to give to it all the attention desired, and which has been beneficial alike to the public and themselves. Politics never before was considered in selecting a postmaster, nor even now is there any one here of the party in power, who has been long enough with us to be a full-fledged citizen, with any desire for the office; in fact it is a matter of much surprise that any one who can eke out a living elsewhere wants a position which requires one's presence all times at the public call, as the law compels that it shall be open to the public from early morning until late in the evening, and for the small pittance derived from its duties, the postmaster must furnish some two or three thousand dollar bonds. Why any one, who is not situated as is our present postmaster or his immediate predecessor, wants to furnish that amount of bonds for so small a return, and with so few honors, is beyond the average comprehension. Why not leave well enough alone? Why should a whole village be compelled to discommode itself to gratify one man's own political desires and arrangements? Why should politics be brought into so small a scale as this, and the public be made to suffer because one new-comer to our village desires to bolster up his influence and power over those who have long been citizens of our village, honored and respected by all. We have many good, sterling democrats, who are by far more entitled to the office than he who most desires it, and unless they have signed both papers, most of our leading and influential democrats are in opposition to this movement, as their names appear on the remonstrance. We care not to what political party our postmaster belongs, what is his nationality or religion, as this is a free country, and all are entitled to equal rights and privileges, and these do not here, except with a few, enter into this case. It is wholly a matter of one's own benefit, but we do object to outsiders coming here, and before they are thoroughly acclimated, attempt to wrestle from the government its only office to dispose of here, and this from a good, faithful and perfectly satisfactory incumbent, who has at his own expense refitted his office for the benefit of the public whom he serves. Were the office to be bestowed upon a citizen of long standing of any party, not one word of protest would we utter, provided it was not to leave its present central locality. This is no vain from a republican, as the writer is a firm believer in and endorses fully our model president, and his so far worthy acts, and we have every faith in his or his Postmaster-General's refusal to sanction this usurpation of other person's privileges, and that which in every sense belongs to another.

Sentence of Charles L. Blood.

Charles L. Blood, who was indicted in 1882 for obtaining about $3000 from Francis L. Andrews of Natick, and whose case had been pending since that time, was before Judge Mason of the Superior Court Tuesday, on a motion for a new trial made since the Supreme Court overruled his exceptions. After arguments Judge Mason overruled the motion, and District Attorney Adams moved for sentence, and Judge Mason sentenced Blood to four years' imprisonment in the State Prison.

AWNINGS FOR WINDOWS

FURNISHED AND PUT ON BY

WALTER THORP,

NEWTON CENTRE.

The simplest and best awning ever made. It need not be removed to close the blinds; can be put on or removed in one minute by any one from the inside. It presents no folds to catch the rain or dust, and therefore is very durable. The awning can be attached to the window any distance from the top, so as to give a passage of air over it. It can be opened at either side, or both, to give an increased circulation of air. In case of removal, can, at slight expense, be made to fit any window. No carpenter needed, spring or fall. It costs no more than any other style of awning, much less than most.

I have fourteen styles and colors of Belvidere double-faced awning stripes. Samples of the goods and model of the fixtures can be seen at any time on Pelham street, or anywhere in Newton or vicinity on request by letter or otherwise.

Waverley Avenue Hearing.

At the hearing on the widening, grading and reconstruction of Waverley avenue, before the board of Aldermen Monday evening, Mr. Peter Thatcher appeared for the heirs of John Capen, and argued against the proposed improvement. The lots owned by them on the corner of Waverley avenue and Washington street were so shallow already, and of such a shape, that if six feet were taken off in front as proposed, the lots would be seriously damaged in value. The owners would prefer that the street should remain in its present condition, rather than lose any portion of their land. If the syndicate that had purchased the tract of land on the east side, and were urging this improvement, wished to have the street widened, they might spare six feet from their tract for the widening. Besides, there was a row of fine old shade trees in front of the Capen land which were liable to be cut down, if the widening was carried out in the way proposed. Councilman French, the trustee of the syndicate, stated that the eastern side of Waverley avenue had been occupied by a low class of buildings with undesirable tenants, and the buildings were a constant eyesore to the residents in the vicinity. To people driving into the city from Boston these old rookeries were about the first thing that met their eye. Finally, the neighbors had clubbed together, and bought the tract of land on the east side, removed the buildings, and intended to sell the land to parties desiring to build a respectable class of residences. They had spent already some $11,000, $5,000 of which they would never get back, but they were willing to lose it for the benefit of that portion of the city. The present road from Tremont street to Washington was impassable in the winter and spring, and almost impassable at any time. Residents who wished to get from Washington St., to that part of the city across "Snake Hollow" had to go around by Park street. The Capen heirs will be benefited as much as any one, as it will make their land desirable for building sites, which it is not at present.
The other part of Waverley avenue is much used for pleasure driving, and this portion would be if it was improved. The avenue would be made 50 feet wide, and the improvement was much needed. Mr.
Thatcher replied that this was the first time he had heard that the syndicate would lose any money, but that had nothing to do with the question. If the syndicate wished the street widened let them give of their own land, and not insist that the Capen heirs should contribute to their own injury. The hearing was then closed, and the Aldermen passed the order for the widening of the street, awarding the following sums as compensation for damages sustained: John Capen's heirs, $221.20;
James W. French, $184; Joseph Moore, $115.12; G. P. Ellis, $15.36; James W.
French, trustee, $461.64.

The Pensive Fair.

One of those perfumes, faint and rare,
Coming near,
On the balmy summer air
Floating here;
One of those sweetest mournful strains
Whose plaintiveness, whose sad refrains—
Now wooing dreams, now sighing,
Now chanting and now dying—
Fill the ear;
One of those fond, golden hours
That endear
The day that dullest, darkest lowers, Ling'ring here
But for a moment's happiness
To leave us longer loneliness
Through the year.
One of the songs fairies sing us
When we see
All the dreams and charms that bring us
Reverie;
Like the lost Pleiad's wondrous glow
Ne'er seen on earth again below,
A smile of beauty's fairest face,
A glimpse of girlhood's rarest grace
Came to me,
When, all the witching fair among Fairest the!
That mingled in the laughing throng Pensively—
A vision of rapt loveliness
Which left that gentlest loneliness—Memory.

HILLARY BELL.

THE STRANGE EXPERIENCE OF SHADRACH PLATT.

With a martial tilt of his shaggy, white beaver hat, and a ponderous cane with silken tassels, Capt. Amzi Platt awaited, under the big elm in his dooryard, the coming of his sons, Shadrach and Meshach. The captain had earned his title at Lundy's Lane '12, and carried about a perpetual reminder of that spirited battle in the form of an irritating British bullet in his thigh. So he retained his martial spirit, and it was his habit to cast a critical eye upon the youthful militia company of the town on the occasion of the yearly May training, after the plowing and the planting were done and the hoeing was awaiting its time. That critical eye was wont to subject the two sturdy sons to a preliminary and private inspection, but upon this bright May morning there were unusual reasons why the captain was resolute in his disciplinary determination.

Capt. Amzi had named his sons, as he had all things with which he had to do, from the Scriptures, for he was as earnest a Puritan as he had been a zealous soldier. He gave his possessions such appropriate and suggestive names from the good book as were befitting. His farm he called Canaan, because milk and honey abounded; his three sons were Shadrach, Meshach, Abednego, for he wished them to be trained as by fire. He even called a vicious and powerful bull Nebuchadnezzar, not only because of his viciousness, but because, like the ancient king, he ate grass.

By the village people the three sons of Capt. Amzi were addressed by abbreviated names. Shadrach was called Shad, Meshach was curiously corrupted into Shed, while Abednego became Bed. To his father's grief and astonishment, Bed perished with a cramp while swimming in the cool waters of Bantam on the Lord's day; but Shad and Shed, being trained in what the captain conceived to be the rigorous scriptural way, became sturdy and strong men, and it was with pride that the warrior led his sons up to the Litchfield ballot box in '32 to cast their first votes for Andrew Jackson.

Capt. Amzi's democracy was as sound as his orthodoxy. It was Capt. Amzi's wish that one of his sons should wed the daughter of his neighbor of the next farm; for the captain had a practical eye, and it had observed that the Widow Pellet's farm joined to his own would make a noble territory, unequalled, the captain thought, in all Connecticut. But the captain met with some perplexity, and often did he wish that the widow had been blessed with two daughters. For he perceived that both his boys yearned for Jerusha Pellet's smiles, and both were gratified, for they received these manifestations; yet both were in distraction, for she was impartial in her distribution of such favors. So it happened that the captain had fixed upon the great May training day as an occasion when the maid should be led to discover her own mind. Yet each of the boys was to have a fair chance. So the captain had commanded them to polish up their uniforms with great care. Though these uniforms were in no respect uniforms at all, for each member of the militia wore such distinguishing garments as pride or circumstance dictated, yet in one respect there was uniformity, for the buttons were all of brass, more or less polished.

So Capt. Amzi awaited under the elm tree the coming of his sons, and soon Shad was there, and his father scanned him closely and bade him march back and forth a bit.

"H't your shoulders," was the captain's comment; "set 'em well back, plump out your chest, and look as stern as possible. Remember and don't turn your left foot in. There'll be one there to observe you with an observing eye."

And by and by Shed came and plumped down a stout leg encased in buckskin breeches, and he stood erect before his father awaiting inspection.

"You'll do," said the veteran. "Pitch the hussar cap a little more over the eye, and keep the strap of it just under your lips; don't make the salute with your left hand, if you be left handed. Do your best, Meshach. There'll be one eyeing you. When you march set that leg down firm. It is a stout one and maids like strength; and bear in mind when you are marching, Meshach, that the widow's woodland jines our medder."

An hour or so later Capt. Amzi stood in the shadow of the brick church upon the village green, watching with proper pride the evolutions of the militia. These were energetic, but not precise in all respects, but there at the head of the file were Shad and Shed. Shad's chest swelled out with military firmness, while Shed's stout leg was plumped with promptitude upon the turf. No wonder Captain Amzi pointed them out with pride to a mature woman who stood beside him, dressed in a silk with mighty puckers in the sleeve, or that he directed the attention of a younger person, with very round and rosy cheeks and plump figure, to the young men.

"Just watch that step of Meshach's Jerusha," said the captain to this pleasing person, who was watching demurely both Shad and Shed with some pride in her black eyes, for she knew her merit. "There ain't a lad in the militia who has such a strong leg. Them buckskin breeches was his uncle's, worn at Lundy's Lane, and, though Uncle Ephraim was a big man, Meshach had all he could do to manage the buckskins. Buckskin's the rig for a soldier; no pantaloons flopping about them."

The maid smiled demurely, while the captain slyly nudged Mrs. Pellet on her puckered sleeve, and gave her a cute and knowing wink. The maid observed this pantomime, and who can tell what contradiction of nature it was that led her to look more steadily at Shad because they pointed out Shed's gallantry to her?

When at noon the militia broke ranks for an hour of rest and cider brandy, Shadrach, in a cocked hat, with a rosette and a shad-bellied coat with faded buff facings that had done service '12, made his way quickly to the tussock upon which sat Miss Jerusha Pellet, and when she looked up at him Shad perceived that at last Jerusha knew her mind. And when Shed came a moment later seeking her, he perceived that she glanced slightly at his pasteboard hussar cap with the faded red ball upon it, and especially disdained his buff buckskins, and it alarmed him. But he determined that he would show his prowess with the big cannon at the artillery drill in the afternoon. So, when the big gun that had done service in two wars was brought out, and the infantry became artillery, Shed rammed home the cartridge with mighty thrusts, furtively looking at the maid when he finished, and stood erect and daringly near the muzzle with the ramrod held upright. But he saw that it was not at him that Jerusha looked, but upon Shad, standing, with the vanity of success, at the vent, and applying the red-hot poker with what was meant to be military grace; and when the report came with a great reverberation, Shed saw Shad exchanging a greeting through the rising smoke with the plump little maid beyond.

And that night Shed called Shad aside and said to him:

"She's decided to-day. It's you Shad."

"I couldn't help it, Shed."

"It was your regimentals, Shad. Father would make me wear the buckskins."

So it happened that when the June roses were in bloom and the cherries were ripe Shadrach and Jerusha were married.

Had Capt. Amzi remained longer on earth, perhaps Shad would have been spared some trials that he speedily met. But the captain's days were soon numbered, and Shed having departed to another place, the old Platt homestead was dreary and desolate. But Shad found his trial in the Widow Pellet.

Shad was a very patient man, so much so that Capt. Amzi had often been perplexed respecting his name, wondering whether it would not have been wiser to have named the boy Job. And being very patient, he had, of course, great persistency, which by reason of his meek manner, the widow and his wife did not suspect.

So it happened that Shad, being indeed grievously beset by the widow, determined that sooner or later he would deprive himself and Jerusha of her society. So when the widow unbraided him, as was her daily wont, with all manner of faults, Shad meekly bent his head and received her verbal lashes, thinking the while that some good means would come by which he would peaceably overcome her.

All the people of the village wondered at the meekness displayed by Shad; and the report of his trials having reached Shed, he wrote Shad a letter, saying that "no six-foot man ought to be hen-pecked by a mother-in-law."

Shad patiently endured these things, and went his way.

The morning the widow Pellet said to him:

"You Platts are a fine lot. There's no more snap to you than to a toad stool; a fine lot you are."

And Shad, with meekness, replied:

"Yes, all fine, some finer than others, but all fine; yes, all fine."

"Do you hear that, Jerusha, in my own house, and him that I encouraged to have you, answers me back with impudence? Don't you see how cruel he is?"

"Yes, I have heard it, mother. Do you suppose, Shad Platt, that I'd turned Shed away if I had dreamt you were going to be cruel to mother and me. You hurt our feelings every day. You don't seem to realize what a fine woman my mother is, and have no idea what a fine family you married into."

"Yes," said Shad gently, "all fine. Some finer than others, but all fine; yes, all fine."

"There it is again, Jerusha. How much longer are you going to stan' such contradiction and impudence?" and when Shad tried to laugh the unpleasantness away, he was informed that he had a temper; and when he tried to take Jerusha by the hand he was condemned for a cruel man, and when he said he hoped not, they told him he was in a passion, that he was always getting in a passion; and when in the humblest spirit, he said he sometimes feared he did when the nigh ox and other critters bothered him, then, to his amazement, the women sobbed, and the widow took Jerusha off to her own chamber to console her, and Shad did not set eyes upon them again that day. But Shad, though a patient man, and a peaceful man, was a persistent one, and he bided his time.

One day the widow informed Jerusha that it was to be borne no longer. "You've got to live without me or without him. What ever possessed you to take him instead of Shed? Shed allers thought a heap more of you than Shad."

Mrs. Pellet observed that Jerusha spoke not, and moved about her avocations with closed lips. Shad saw it, too, and at length asked her pleasantly, if she had lost her tongue.

"No, but I've been thinking, Shad Platt, that you and me were great fools to get married, and it's too much to expect it's going to last all our days, and it ain't. Tomorrow you've got to drive me over to Litchfield, and draw twenty-five dollars out of the savings bank."

Shad uttered no word of protest, but next morning, arrayed in his Sunday clothes, he drove his wife to Litchfield and gave her money; and while she was counselling with the lawyers Shad sat on the bench under the oak in the tavern yard and thanked his stars that he was a patient and persistent man; and when she came out to him he gently lifted her into the wagon, and drove silently home. Just before he reached the gate, he asked:

"Did you—did you get the bill, Jerusha?"

"It's going into court right away. But let's you and I part good friends, Shad."

He did not even go in with her, but drove away to the desolate Platt homestead, and Shad no more entered the widow's house; and he thought, as he sat by his solitary fire, that patience had her perfect work, and he wondered if the widow realized it. So Shad and Jerusha were divorced, and all the people said it was well persisted. Shad went his way with silent persistence, pondering what he should do that he might still further accomplish his purpose respecting the widow Pellet. For, though he confessed it to no one, Shad's design had been but half perfected by the divorce. One afternoon, as he was mowing the after-math meadow, he stopped suddenly and laughed gently, for it had come to him how he could accomplish his design.

And when in the meeting-house on the next Lord's day the widow Pellet and her daughter saw Shad escorting a comely young housekeeper—she was the widow of his cousin—and her little son to the old Platt pew, Shad perceived, as he glanced furtively at the Pellet pew that he should accomplish his purpose, and that there are other revenges than loud-noised and vehement ones, for the widow wrestled with her annoyance, and Jerusha's cheeks became pale with emotion as she beheld the young housekeeper.

Not many Sundays were the widow and her daughter able to endure this sight, for the housekeeper was very comely, and Shad was most courteous to her. So after some weeks the widow, seeing Shad one day down by the brook meadow, which was not far from her house, clad herself properly and went out to him. And she spoke some words sorrowfully to him, and even hinted that she might have been hasty; but, above all, she bade him take pity on Jerusha.

"Does Jerusha want pity? Send her right out to me, Mrs. Pellet;" and in a few minutes Jerusha, whose cheeks were very pale, came slowly out to meet him, and Shad went up to her holding out his hand, and said some things to her gently, and—well, it became known in the village before many days that Shad and Jerusha had made up their minds to marry again, but that Shad had insisted that Jerusha come with him to the old Platt homestead, and that the widow should remain in her old home. Shad had his way in another matter, too, for he was married by the same judge who divorced Jerusha from him.

And though Shad was, in truth, given to some secret pride that his patience and persistence had prevailed against the widow, yet he made no outward show of it, but was gentle and meek, and continued to find all things fine, some finer than others, but all fine.

Soon after he took Jerusha unto himself a second time the widow Pellet was taken and laid beside her departed husband, Zerahabel, in the old burying ground by the Shepaug.

Now though Shad and Jerusha lived peaceably, there were moments when restraint was upon them, and that becomes irksome at times. For Jerusha, perceiving that Shad was a patient man, but not comprehending that he was a persistent one, was at times greatly shocked in her pride, believing that her husband had no spunk, and was in fact what her mother had once called him, a great calf. This because Shad resented not when one of his neighbors sold him a horse that seemed fine enough to look upon, but which one Sunday, in the sight of all who were going to the brick church, became seized with a frenzy like inebriation, and staggered this way and that, at last falling down. It did not escape Jerusha's eye that the youths about were laughing, nor that the women smiled with the sarcastic smile of contempt; and was it strange that mortification wounded her so that her chin quivered and tears came to her eyes?

And when she urged Shad to go to the law with the man who had cheated him with a blind-staggering horse, it offended her that Shad should say very mildly that he should not go to law. How could Jerusha, not yet understanding her husband, realize that Shad relied upon patience and persistence for reparation,—which he may digress long enough to say he one day obtained, for Shad bided his time until occasion offered to buy one of his horse-dealing neighbor's mortgages, when, having done so, Shad persisted in foreclosing. Thus patiently Shad Platt accomplished his purposes. And there were other occurrences which Jerusha, not as yet understanding her husband, set down as proof of his milkop character.

But it was over the horse that blind staggered that serious trouble arose, and again Shad had a trial. For on the Sunday following she declared she would not ride to meeting to be mortified to death again. But Shad drove the staggerer around to the stump of an oak that was used for a step, and persisted in his purpose, and Jerusha was compelled to ride behind the beast again, and there was another scene in front of the church, in which Jerusha, having been pitched from the wagon, ruined her garments and was deeply wounded in spirit. So that in her pew, instead of regaining composure, she lost the little she possessed, and quitted the church in anger.

Shad saw her making her way to the house of her mother's brother, but he did not follow her. He went calmly to his house and spent the rest of the Lord's day doctoring the unruly beast that took pride, seemingly, in staggering on Sunday.

But next day Jerusha came not, nor the next, and yet the patient Shad went about his avocations without dismay. And by and by Shad received a notice duly veighed with legal verbiage to the effect that his spouse Jerusha sought to be released from the bonds, a vinculo, of matrimony. Shad tucked the paper away between the leaves of the great family Bible, where important papers were kept, so many that the binding was sadly strained, and that was all he did about it.

Some three months later Shad was surprised to learn that the court declined to grant the decree. Jerusha had been unable to prove intolerable cruelty, or drunkenness, or such other causes for divorce as are set down in the statutes. But the Litchfield county lawyers were able men in those times, and they bade Jerusha to despair not. So, and this much common repute sets down to be a truth, one of them, whose genius had overcome more difficulties than one, induced the general court, or legislature, to add to the causes wherefore divorces may be granted this clause: "Or such conduct as tends defeat the purpose of the marriage relations."

And with the blue-bound copy of the new law this lawyer went into court and asked whether such conduct as the compulsion of a wife to ride behind a horse afflicted with the blind staggers to church, to the great dread, mortification and suffering of the wife, were not conduct sufficient to defeat all harmonious marriage relations. And the court thought decidedly it was, especially as Shad appeared not in court to deny it.

Shad pursued his calm and patient manner of life in peace, but in the course of a year or two it dawned upon his neighbors that Shad Platt, despite his peaceful ways and his humble manner, was a determined man. No man could be found who in the long run had worsted him. The quiet manner in which he had evaded up with the wicked horse dealer became known, and there were hints that Shad was well beforehand with the world, and had obeyed the scriptures, so that he had increased his talent till it had become ten talents. And his neighbors sent him to represent them in the legislature, and one day they elected him high sheriff of the country, an honor of great esteem in those times.

Once a week Shad saw Jerusha. She sat in the Amen pew in the brick meeting house, and he was seated where he beheld her, and he always spoke pleasantly to her at the nooning, saying: "I'm glad to see you looking so well, Jerusha."

One winter's night there had been a donation party at the parson's, and Jerusha was there and Shad, and when it came time to depart, was it not Shad that observed that, whereas, all the others were going away in sleighs, Jerusha must needs walk? So he took her gently by the arm and led her to his sleigh, which was a fine one, richly painted and stuffed with heavy robes, and before the woman realized it, there she was in the sleigh, well tucked in, with Shad by her side, flying over the snow like the wind, and she perceived how powerful he was, and how he mastered the spirited horse, and how gently, though firmly, he spoke to the animal.

"This horse hasn't got the blind staggers, Jerusha," said he at length, smiling quietly. "Shall I give him the bit?"

"Yes, if you wish."

"They flew so she could not see, and had to hold her breath, and she perceived that Shad, to hold her firmly, had passed his arm about her with a respectful but powerful embrace. Nor did she shrink away. "Shall we ride further?" he asked.

"Yes," she said in a low voice. "Yes, it seems—"

"Seems what?"

"It seems so much like courting, Shad."

"We never did much courting, Jerusha. That was the trouble, I guess. Let's begin now. I knew all along we would, sooner or later. Didn't you?"

"I kinder hoped so, Shad."

And after that he paid his court to her like a young lover, for he had learned her merit, and perceived that at last she loved him, as he had always loved her. And she, with what joy she now saw her lover as he was, and with what reproaches and mortification she recalled her blindness.

He lived with her forty years, and five sons and daughters had they, and when he died she could not stay without him, and laid down and followed him within a month.

Thus it happened, though twice divorced and thrice married, Shadrach Platt had only one wife, and with her found peace and joy.—[E. J. E., in the New York Sun.

Some fragrant trees
By flower-sown seas
Where boats go up and down,
And a sense of rest
To the tired breast
In this beautiful Aztec town.

But the terrible thing in this Aztec town
That will blow men's rest into stormiest skies,
Or whether they journey or they lie down—
These white and these wonderful Spanish eyes!

Great walls about Gate-posts without
That prop these sapphire skies!
Two huge gate-posts
Snow white like ghosts—
Gate-posts to this Paradise!

But, oh! turn back from the high-walled town!
There is trouble enough in this world, I surmise,
Without men riding to regiments down,
To die by those perilous Spanish eyes!

BACCA LAUREATE SERMON ON THE GOLDEN RULE BY PRESIDENT ALVAH
HOVEY, D. D.

The president of the Newton Theological Institution, Rev. Alvah Hovey, delivered the baccalaureate sermon Sunday morning in the Baptist church before the graduates and a large congregation. The sermon was founded on the golden rule, Matthew vii. 12: "Therefore, all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do even so to them; for this is the law and the prophets." The following is a brief summary of the main points of the sermon:

Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners, and the text has a remarkable reference to the moral law. If any man believes he can obey the law of love to God and not follow the golden rule, or that he can follow that rule without love, the judgment day will prove him wrong. A man should select the kind of work in which he can do the most good, and not that in which he can secure the most money and applause. The golden rule refers also to the manner of life. A man may be unfair in his business, taking a selfish advantage, or, if just, may have a cold bearing, wounding and embittering his neighbor. It is difficult to have a ruling purpose to do what is right, but more difficult to inculcate a right spirit. The employer should be in the spirit of Christ to toward his workmen as if the positions were reversed; for although it is not an easy matter to determine the value of labor, yet it is possible to get near its just share of profits. The laborer is also subject to the golden rule; and this he cannot follow as an eye servant or by claiming that the world owes him a living without work, but by honest toil.

The golden rule affects all our deeds and words; our looks, smiles, frowns and silence. No member of the human family is outside its direction. Christ was the one true and perfect realization of manhood, nor Jewish or Greek, but normal and generic. Fifteen years' labor at the carpenter's bench must have given him a knowledge of trade. A sacred writer has assured us he was tempted in all ways, and at Nazareth he came in contact with all kinds of men. He was divine as well as human, sharing the nature of both God and man. He knew what men were and what they must become. The life that Jesus must live to please God, all must live to please God. The precept of Christ presupposes that human nature is the same in all times and all classes, that the soul of the beggar is as precious as the soul of a prince.

Many true Christians believe it is impossible to succeed in business and follow the golden rule. Is it necessary to acquire wealth to succeed? Do you think more of Solomon than of Paul? Yet it is possible that God has given us a rule which tends to poverty? To treat others as you would have them treat you is consistent with business success. The golden rule is an expression of the highest wisdom, and millions admit it is a perfect law of action, but confess, with bated breath, that they do not adopt it, claiming they cannot in the fierce struggle of life. Although we are in a dust clouded arena, this apology will not hold. Morality is the handmaid of religion; virtues grow in clusters, like grapes; you must have Christ in your hearts if you would observe it; must direct them first to the lamb of God. I congratulate you, my brethren, that your service will be in the gospel. Our only hope of a better understanding is in diminishing selfishness by love. The law, police, arbitration may be something; out to create a clean heart and a divine spirit within is more, and your mission is to do this work.

Death of a Naval Officer.

Caleb J. Emery, a retired pay director in the navy, died Saturday morning at his home, corner of Jewett and Pearl streets, after a long illness, at the age of 66 years. The deceased had been connected with the navy for over a quarter of a century, as pay-master, inspector and pay director. He was born in Lebanon, Me., and when a young man lived for some time at Nashua, N. H. When the Mexican war broke out, he enlisted in Col. Wright's Massachusetts regiment and served as quartermaster until the war closed. After the war he was appointed deputy sheriff of Hillsboro county, N. H., and held that position several years, his residence being in Nashua. He received the appointment of paymaster in the navy from New Hampshire in April, 1855, and was first attached to the United States storeship Relief, Brazilian squadron, 1855 to 1856. He was attached to the storeship Levant, East Indian squadron, 1857-58; storeship Saratoga, Home squadron, 1858-59; storeship Narragansett, Pacific squadron, 1859 to 1862, and the storeship Brandywine, North Atlantic blockading squadron, 1862-63. From 1863 to 1865 he was in the navy yard inspector of provisions and clothing, and pay and purchasing paymaster at the Portsmouth Navy Yard. From 1866 to 1869 he was attached to the Asiatic squadron as fleet paymaster and naval store keeper, and became inspector of provisions and clothing at New York Navy Yard in 1869, continuing in that capacity for three years, when he was detached and assigned to the Boston Navy Yard, serving in the same capacity from 1873 to 1876. After that he became pay director at the Boston yard and served until 1882, when he was retired. Capt. Emery had lived in Newton for several years, and for a long time suffered severely from rheumatism. For several days past so intense was his suffering that it was necessary to keep him under the influence of opiates. In politics he was a staunch Democrat. He leaves a widow and one son. The funeral services were held on Monday afternoon at his late residence. There was a large attendance of relatives, friends and naval officers, among the latter being Pay Directors C. W. Abbot and G. E. Thornton, Paymasters John F. Farbell and C. H. McDaniel, Capt. Joseph Fyffe, Chief Engineer D. B. Macomb, John W. Hanson, chief clerk to the commandant of the navy yard; John F. Ferguson, chief clerk of the navy yard; Thomas A. Swords, formerly paymaster with the deceased in 1863; Abram R. Thompson, cashier of the naval pay office; J. H. H. Wilson, B. F. Perkins, William Sargent and James Collins, inspectors of provisions and clothing. Rev. Thomas R. Lambert, D. D., formerly chaplain of the navy, conducted the services, assisted by Rev. F. B. Of the National Currency.

To the Editor of the Graphic.

The subject of the Circulating Medium is the most important subject before the Nation, and the following suggestions or affirmations we believe to indicate the true system for the future of this country.

1st. First we will repeat the declaration of Mr. Calhoun in the Senate of the U. S. "That a Legal Tender National Currency that was received and disbursed by Government would par with Gold," in this he said he could not be contradicted. And Albert Gallatin said essentially the same thing.

2d. We affirm that there is no other way possible of providing a circulating medium, as perfect sound and permanent, as so much of the National debt, circulating as the money of the country, for all time.

3d. We affirm that such a currency fixed at the amount per capita, which experience has shown to be adequate and most advantageous to industrial nations, increasing in the ratio of the increase of population, would insure uninterrupted prosperity, and would strengthen the internal bonds that make the Nation one.

This ratio per capita as to amount, is of vital importance, it provides a just guide, where hitherto there has been none, it would also take from a Secretary of the Treasury the power to disturb single handed, the labor industries and business of the whole country.

4th. We affirm that such currency would with absolute certainty command Gold and Silver when wanted for international currency, that ten fold magnified question, might so far as this country is concerned, cease forever.

5th. We affirm that such National Currency would naturally and inevitably become the standard of value, being the only thing thought of, when price was asked or paid, being also more even than Gold and Silver, which can never be separated from the universal law of demand and supply, and the bewildering twaddle about a double or single standard might also cease, our standard would be the National Currency, to-day, and one hundred years from to-day.

6th. The system would be very easy of adoption, doing violence to nothing. Let Congress provide for the payment of all bonds in such National Currency, or in Gold or Silver, or in 365 bonds, at the option of the holder, subject to no change but to increase with increase of population, and let the currency alone, the labor and business of the country would quickly conform to it, enterprise would have a safe basis to act from, and all kinds of business would be good.

Such a currency interchangeable with 365 interest bearing bonds would form a currency more perfect than any Nation has ever enjoyed.

The existence of such bonds at times absorbing idle funds, convertible at the option of the holder, into a currency sure to command Gold and Silver whenever wanted, would be a great blessing to the country, all being based on the national responsibility, a simple debt of the Nation.

It is essentially the same plan advocated by Horace Greeley, Peter Cooper, Henry C. Cary, H. C. Beard and many others.

Mr. Chace in his first report as Secretary of the Treasury remarked: "A system of National Banking for all, and secure for all, can only be safely and firmly established by making use of a portion of the National debt as its security."

Benjamin Franklin said "Paper Money" well founded has great advantages over Gold and Silver."

These names are all of profound statesmen, interested only for the public welfare.

In France the circulating medium per capita is about .48, our own country needs more than any other, but is maintained at 40 per capita we should hear no more of hard times.

In the sincere belief that this system of Finance is the best possible for this country, we are anxious to have it become familiar to the popular mind, not hesitating to spend all we can afford for that end, hoping that with improvements it may come to pass. T. H. C.

A PUBLIC BENEFACTION.

How to laundry linen as it is done in Troy, N. Y., has been kept a secret long enough; it can and should be done in every family. The ELASTIC STARCH is the only starch in the United States that is put up by men who have a practical knowledge of the laundry profession. It requires no cooking, keeps the iron from sticking and linen from blistering while ironing, and gives shirts, cuffs and collars that stiffness and beautiful polish they have when new, which, everybody knows, keeps them clean twice as long. Beware of imitations. See that the name J. C. HUNGERFORD & BRO., New Haven, Conn., is on every package.

THE TOBIN BILL.

The Tobin bill has finally passed the State Senate in the same form as it came from the House. The executive veto is now the only thing in the way of this unwise and retrogressive bill's becoming a law of the State. Republicans cannot help a feeling of shame that of the votes the bill received in the senate, a majority came from Republican Senators; men who might have been supposed to have been earnest supporters of civil service reform. Their votes seem to imply that this bill sets forth the policy of the Republican party, and this can not fail to prove unfortunate for the party. It marks the beginning of an attempt to break down the civil service reform policy, and we do not believe that such an attempt will be favored even by a majority of the veterans, for whose ostensible benefit the bill was framed. It will, if it becomes a law, cause the offices to be filled, not by the veterans best fitted to discharge the duties of the office, but by those who can bring the most political influence to bear, and will be of not the slightest benefit to those poor and needy veterans, who are most in need of the salary they would receive from an office. It might have been expected that Democrats would favor the bill, as its passage would bring discredit upon the Republican majority in the legislature among the friends of reform in the State, who are neither few nor insignificant, and its practical workings would soon make the bill unpopular among the great majority of the veterans themselves. It was a shrewd move on the part of the Democrats, and they have accomplished their purpose, whether the Governor signs the bill or not.

THE CITIZEN a magazine whose motto is "Good Government through good Citizenship," deserves a wide circulation among those who aspire to become good citizens. Its aim is to acquaint voters with the true principles of government, and the May number contains a number of valuable contributions from prominent men. The paper on "The True Object of Free Public Schools," by Dr. C. F. Crehore of Newton Upper Falls, has a special interest for the readers of the GRAPHIC, and is given in another column. The position taken puts the free school question in what to many will be a new light, but the position is the true one. The other contents of the number are well worth a careful perusal. The Citizen is published by Heath & Co., of Boston, under the auspices of the American Institute of Civics.

THE Dedication of the Cottage Hospital drew forth a large attendance from all portions of the city, and a description of the building, a list of the contributors, and a report of the proceedings will be found on the 7th page. The only thing to criticize about the list of physicians is that the name of Dr. Mary E. Bates does not appear, although she has shown a deep interest in the hospital, and has done as much for it as any of the other physicians. There is said to be a good deal of feeling among her friends, who think that her high standing in the profession, and the fact that she is the only lady physician in the city, entitled her to recognition.

Boston had a public meeting this week to discuss the merits of military drill for scholars in the High schools. The opinions were as various as the speakers. Some opposed it because the girls could not participate, and others thought a well equipped gymnasium would be better, but it was a noticeable fact that the speakers who had had a practical experience in the matter, all endorsed military drill for boys at the High schools, as being preferable to any other kind of physical exercise.

THE Boston Sunday Herald published nearly a column extract from the Memorial day oration of Alderman Samuel L. Powers, under the heading "The Union Soldier's Task, How the Strength and Resources of the South were finally overcome." The Herald said that many interesting facts in regard to the war were brought out in the oration, and the compliment thus paid the orator is well deserved.

Subscribers to the GRAPHIC are requested to compare the dates upon their papers, and see that they agree with their last payments. Upon every paper is printed the date to which payment has been made, and notice should be given of any error.

A LARGE number of the voters of the city have been pleased the past week at receiving a copy of congressman Ely's speech upon some contested election case. Evidently our congressman does not forget his constituents.

THE Board of Aldermen did a remarkably large amount of business Monday night, especially in the way of voting large sums for all sorts of improvements. It is fortunate that Newton is a wealthy city and can afford to spend thousands of dollars, where other cities, with a much larger population, spend hundreds, and is there not such a thing as going too fast?

A prominent citizen of Newton, in sending a private note to this paper, says: "Every week's issue seems to be a marked improvement on the last." That is what we are aiming at, and the fact that there is an increase each week in the number of copies sold, shows that the people of Newton appreciate a good local paper.

AUBURNDALE is to have its tunnel, and the hat is to be passed around for only $2,000 from its citizens, instead of $3,000 as at first suggested. This practice of levying a double tax upon the wealthy citizens of Newton, whenever any improvement is proposed, seems to be firmly established.

An Open Letter to William Bliss, Esq.

HONORED AND DEAR SIR:

The Boston and Albany is undoubtedly one of the largest and oldest railroad corporations in New England; and its success in its earliest days may be attributed to some extent to the patronage and support which has always been extended to it by the people of Newton. Of all the towns with which Massachusetts is blessed there is none superior to Newton. Her record for bravery during the war with the Indians and her love of liberty and justice both in the revolution and the war of the rebellion, all attest to her chivalry and patriotism, and the blessing accorded to her by the labors of the Apostle Eliot will never be forgotten. Then again her schools and seminaries, her churches and clergymen, her poet "America," her magnificent scenery and pure water, and excellent roads and beautiful residences, her parks and library, together with her intelligent and happy people, establishes her claim for superiority to all other towns.

The area of the City of Newton is 12,600 acres, the population is about 20,000, which makes a little more than one and one-half person to the acre. In your prosperity, Mr. President, you have wisely constructed the Circuit Road over a new section of the city, which will greatly aid to your business and plethoric treasury. In all great events pertaining to the acquisition of territory, history and tradition reveal the fact that kings and rulers always seek to secure the friendship and good will of new subjects, and would it not be well for the Boston and Albany to aid in perpetuating it by reasonable concessions—which can be easily granted—by giving season tickets to those who erect houses within three years. Other roads have done it with great profit. There are a great many towns whose residents are taxed heavily, and in nothing do people dislike to part with money so much, as the tax gatherer well knows. Now with the hearty co-operation of your company and rigid economy in the city government, strangers will build their dwellings and make their homes in Newton to such an extent that the taxes will not, I trust, be more than five dollars on a thousand. In 1848, a gentleman with a large family inadvertently heard of Newton, and upon an inspection of the town concluded to make it his residence. As his business was in Boston, he daily with a portion of his family visited it. As nearly as can be computed he paid in fares over $4,000, which was a net gain to the road of about $3,000. In time we expect to add many thousands to our population and without doubt—such are our advantages—will prove very gratifying to our over taxed citizens.

The Boston and Albany has always been successful, owing to the excellent men who have been its presidents—most of whom I have known—blessed by its able Board of Directors, and your advent to the presidency of the corporation has been exceedingly gratifying to your large constituency, and it has never had a wiser executive. The tribute paid you by the late Mr. Fendall was not only just and deserved, but worthy and merited. In this connection I will add—so far as the Circuit Road is concerned—you will not forget and the people of Newton will always gratefully remember the great service Hon. James P. C. Hyde has rendered to this magnificent enterprise which is now so happily accomplished.

Some sagacious men of our favored city, knowing full well that the thought of death and passing away is to many one of pain and sorrow—have provided a most delightful cemetery in which are seventy-five acres of beautiful land. It is probably equal to the one containing the new made tomb which Joseph of Arimathea gave to our blessed Lord. And this precious cemetery, which already contains the sacred dust of twenty-eight hundred and fifty of our loved friends and dear relatives, is in the hands of a wise corporation, whose president is a distinguished journalist, and a noble superintendent, who has for twenty-five years practically known our different families and his manifested so much kindness and tender sympathy, which has secured for him the sunshine of gratitude from all. It is proper to mention another portion of Newton which is peculiarly attractive and desirable. In it is the railroad station twenty minutes from Boston—eminent judges, two fine newspapers, Eliot Hall, the best physicians, the bank, together with the schools, the library, the parks, popular assessors, forcible lawyers, five churches having large Sabbath schools and the pulpits supplied with talented and excellent preachers. The locality is delightful and unsurpassed, and is sometimes termed Heaven ward. It is conjectured that the most expert astronomer with Clark's latest telescope would pronounce the Garden City of Newton nearest the celestial city.

Faithfully yours,
D. K. H.

A Mysterious Crime.

On Saturday morning last Patrick Collins notified the police that he had discovered the dead body of an infant among the bushes near the brook on Newtonville avenue. The police went to the spot and found the body in an old brown leather satchel, into which it had been crowded, and the satchel was so small that considerable force must have been used. It had evidently been dead some two weeks, and the satchel could have been thrown to the place where it was found, from a carriage passing along the avenue. Medical Examiner Meade was notified, and examined the remains, which were those of a full grown female infant. The advanced decomposition rendered it impossible to discover if death resulted from violence. Undertaker Cate took charge of the body, and the police are making an investigation. It is thought that the satchel will furnish a clue, although probably it was brought in a carriage from some adjoining town.

NEWTON AND NORUMBEGA.

JOHN CABOT'S VISIT TO NEWTON IN THE YEAR 1497.

Newton has, according to Prof. Eben N. Horsford, some ruins which are of quite respectable antiquity, as they extend back to the year 1497, when John Cabot made his famous visit to America. The site of Norumbega has long been a disputed question. Prof. Horsford has for a long time been engaged in a study of the matter, and in a letter to Chief Justice Daly, president of the American Geographical society, he presents a brief record of the discoveries he has made. These are "the Site of the Landfall of John Cabot in 1497" and "the Site of the Fort Norumbega of the French on the banks of the river bearing the same name; and of the Indian settlement near the fort—the Agency of Thetvet; and near it the Norumbega of Allefonsee, visited in 1569 by the sailor Ingraham and his companions, of the unfortunate expedition of Sir John Hawkins."

Prof. Horsford is to embody his discoveries in a book, which will be a valuable addition to the early history of America. His letter has been printed for private circulation. He assumes that John Cabot visited America in the year 1497, and cruised along the shore from the provinces down to Cape Cod. Cabot made the mistake of supposing Norumbega to be a district or country, and this mistake has obscured research in regard to the Landfall of Cabot, from that day to this.

Prof. Horsford assumes that the name was a descriptive one, and described topographical or hydrographical features. Nahumbeak, the Indian name of Salem, is the only Indian name that recalls Norumbega, and the last two syllables mean "still water" or water without current, and might apply to the water in Salem bay. Nahum is taken to mean a "divider of the bay" a tongue of land rising from the bottom of a bay and making two bays. By comparison with other Indian words and roots, Prof. Horsford concludes that Norum is the equivalent of Nahum, and that beak or bega are two forms of writing the same word. He therefore concludes that Norumbega means a tongue of land rising from the bottom of any bay. A study of the ancient maps, many of which are given in this printed copy of Prof. Horsford's letter, and a comparison of them with later ones down to the time of Winthrop, led him to the conclusion that Norumbega lay between Cape Cod and Cape Ann, the Carenas and Cape Breton of Cabot, and the only spot to which the name Norumbega could apply, within these capes, is Salem Neck. The early visitors to this country, among them Allefonsee, spoke of a river, fort and town which they called Norumbega. The description given of the river can apply only to the Charles river, and the town spoken of must have been between Riverside and Waltham. Between the mouth of Stony Brook and Waltham is a striking tongue of land, extending out into still water, and here, Prof. Horsford decided, must have been the site of the town of Norumbega. The mouth of the river is described by ancient writers as being very wide, and dangerous from rocks, which are identified as Cohasset rocks, Minot's Ledge, etc. Assuming that the Charles and the Norumbega river are the same, it is easy to identify the places spoken of by the early explorers, and a multitude of ancient maps examined all testified to this location of the river with more or less minuteness. The French appropriated the name and applied it to a fort on the banks of the Charles, at a junction of a branch of the river with the main stream.

Prof. Horsford was so certain that the fort must have been at this place that in company with City Engineer Davis of Cambridge, he visited the junction of Stony Brook with the Charles, and there found the remains of the fort, of which Mr. Davis made a survey. He says "the Agency of Thetvet, the head, a high, isolated, rounded rock, and the traces of an ancient Indian village near, are on the line of the ditch which takes the water from Stony Brook. The ditch had been known to the owner of the land from his boyhood, and although the property had been in his family for a century or more, he had never heard of its being used for any purpose. The ditch is about 2,300 feet long, of almost uniform level from the point on Stony Brook where the water was received, to where it discharged beyond the fort into the Charles. Excavations made near the spot proved that an Indian town must have been located there."

Prof. Horsford therefore concludes that the site of the Landfall of Cabot was Salem Neck, and the first land seen was Cape Ann or possibly the mountain Agamenticus. 2d, That the town of Norumbega, on the river Norumbega, visited by Ingraham, the fort of Norumbega and the village of Agency of Thetvet, were on the Charles river, between Riverside and Waltham, at the mouth of Stony Brook, and 3d, That John Cabot preceded Columbus in the discovery of America.

The letter is of great interest both from the originality of the discoveries made, and from the thorough knowledge of Indian dialects and the writings of the early explorers of this portion of America displayed by the writer.

The City Government.

The Board of Aldermen met Monday evening, with all the members present. The first business was the Bailey building and Waverley avenue hearings, which are described in another column. No one appeared in the hearings on the laying out and grading of Copley street from Washington street to Hunnewell avenue, or that on the discontinuance of a portion of Beacon street, near the residence of Mary Taylor and the property of the Newton Cemetery Corporation.

Papers from the Common Council were received and referred in concurrence.

Mayor Kimball stated that he had had two interviews already in regard to lower rates of fare and better train service on the Circuit road with B. and A. officials—one with President Bliss, and one with General Manager Barnes—but had no alarming progress to report.

The usual monthly bills were received and read, among them one from the Lawrence Industrial School, for board of three boys sent there for truancy. It amounted to over $900, and was referred to the School Committee.

Timothy Kelly asked for a license to keep a pool and billiard room on Watertown street, Nonantum, and was given leave to withdraw.

L. F. Cunningham was granted a license for erecting a wooden building on Boylston street, Ward 5, for a church. Permits for the erection of dwelling houses were granted to A. G. Tupper, Richardson street, Ward 1; Henry T. Campbell, Lincoln street, Newton Highlands; C. W. Shepard, Elm street, Ward 3; and C. A. Eddy, Cherry street, Ward 3. Daniel Fitzgerald of Crafts street, Nonantum, was granted a junk license. Dr. H. J. Bigelow of Brookline street was granted a permit to build a stable.

T. Albert Ward asked permission to locate a five-horse power boiler and engine in his barn on Ward street, Newton Centre. A hearing on the petition will take place June 21st.

William Waldron asked permission to put up a brick building for a market, off Adams street; referred to license committee.

A street lamp was asked for on the corner of Unity street and Lake avenue, Auburndale; Luther E. Leland at al. asked for a signal box on the corner of Washington and Beacon streets, Newton Lower Falls, both referred.

James Leary presented a claim for compensation for injuries received by being thrown from his cart in Boyd street, May 8th, by reason of a defect in the street. J. M. Lowell also asked for compensation for injuries received by falling over a pile of boards, placed on the sidewalk on Polham street, Newton Centre, March 22, by which he was seriously hurt. Both referred to the claims committee.

J. W. Mitchell of Ward 5 was appointed weigher of coal, weigher and inspector of hay and straw, measurer of grain and measurer of wood and bark.

J. Chester Fuller was appointed auctioneer. City Marshal Hammond reported that complaints had been made that the quiet and peace of the neighborhood were disturbed by the barking of a dog owned by J. F. Horrigan of Washington street, Ward 2, and there seemed no way to reach the case without authority from the board. Referred to committee on ordinances.

The report of the committee, Alderman J. G. Freeman, City Clerk Sampson and City Surveyor Davis of Boston, and Aldermen McKerson and Pettie, City Clerk Kingsbury and City Engineer Noyes of Newton, who had perambulated the Boston and Newton boundaries, was received.

Two street lamps were ordered on Ridge avenue, Ward 6.

An order was read and passed that the City Hall should be closed on June 17th, and the national colors displayed from public buildings. Also an order that the national colors shall be displayed on July 4th, and the following bells rung one-half hour at sunrise, noon and sunset: Ward 2, Methodist and North Village churches; 3, City Hall; 4, Congregational and Episcopal churches; 5, Congregational and Baptist churches; 6, Mason school house; 7, Eliot church, the expenses to be charged to the miscellaneous fund. Permission was also granted to all parties to use fireworks on their own premises on the afternoon and evening of July 4th, and the city clerk was authorized to grant licenses for the sale of fireworks.

An order was passed that Copley street be laid out and accepted by the city. No damages were assessed on any party.

An order was passed discontinuing a strip of Beacon street, near land of Mary Taylor and the Newton Cemetery Corporation.

An order was passed appropriating $14,000; $10,000 of the sum to be used to repair the damages by the spring floods, and $4,000 to be expended in building the tunnel at Auburndale, for citizens of that ward to contribute $2,000, and the railroad company $3,000, in order to utilize a drain to carry off surface water from the depot grounds; the sum appropriated to be taken from any unexpended balances remaining at the end of the year, or added to the assessment of taxes for next year.

In speaking on the order, Alderman Powers said that he was opposed to the practice of putting in such orders the words "to be taken from any unexpended balances in the city treasury" when it was a well known fact that the city treasury was empty, or nearly so. This year there would not be $1,500 left in the city treasury, and all this money would have to come out of next year's taxes. In the last three years the city debt had been increased by about $100,000, and he thought that it was time that a more careful policy should prevail. It was not wise to have the debt of the city increased faster than the city's valuation. He should vote for the order, as it seemed necessary to have the money, but he wished to enter his protest against the policy of spending not only this year's appropriations, but also placing a heavy mortgage upon the appropriations to be made for the coming year.

An order was passed appropriating $2,500 for the purchase of coal to be used at the pumping station.

$250 was appropriated for the purchase of a striker to be used on Hose House No. 6 at Lower Falls, the steam whistle to be given in addition to the appropriation, the money to be taken from the miscellaneous fund.

An order was passed appropriating $200 for the exchange of the stone trough at the corner of Beacon and Centre streets, Ward 1, for an iron one, and a similar amount for the exchange of the stone trough at the corner of Beacon and Centre streets, Ward 6. The stone affairs are inconvenient and not of much use.

$1,600 was appropriated for the widening of Cheesecake brook, between Washington and Prospect streets, Ward 3.

A crosswalk was ordered laid on Washington street, Ward 3, in accordance with the requests of petitioners, and concrete walks ordered laid on portions of Fairmount avenue, Church, Hovey, Marginal, Central, Winthrop and Shaw streets, Newtonville, Central, Watertown and Pleasant streets, Central and Erie avenues, Myrtle, Chapel, Central, Grove and Walnut streets, in response to petitions of the residents, after which the board adjourned.

NEWTONVILLE.

—"The Wellington Literary Club will hold their annual picnic on Charles River, June 17th. A pleasant time is anticipated."

—There will be a Floral Concert by the Sabbath School, at the Central Congregational church Sabbath evening at 6.30.

—Eliot Lodge, K. of H., used its new hall for the first time on Monday evening, and are much pleased with the change.

—It is said that Rev. Mr. White's mother is no worse, and that he will be able to return and preach at the Universalist church on Sunday.

—Do not forget the "Kaffee Klatsch," Saturday afternoon at the Mill house. The proceeds are for the benefit of the Ladies' Guild, and there should be a large attendance.

—Miss Smead leaves on Monday for Paynesville, O., to attend the 25th anniversary of the Lake Erie Female Seminary, with which she was connected for several years. She will be accompanied by her sister, Mrs. L. L. Pierce of Worcester.

—It is expected that Rev. Pleasant Hunter will accept the call to the Central Congregational church. In a private letter to one of the deacons, it was stated that his church at Palmer had refused to accept his resignation, but that he had prevailed upon them to reconsider the vote.

—Newtonville people are very much pleased at the change in Dexter block, since it reached its permanent location. The square is already greatly improved, and work at filling in front of the block will begin on Monday.

—The death of Mrs. J. H. Foss, which occurred on Monday, was sad news to many people here, who have sympathized with her in her long and painful illness. Her husband and one child three years old survive her. The funeral occurred on Wednesday afternoon at her late residence on Clifton street.

—Mr. and Mrs. Axel Gustafsen, of London, have been the guests of Mr. D. C. Heath, the publisher, of this village. Tuesday of last week they were tendered a complimentary banquet by the Massachusetts Total Abstinence Society, at Wesleyan Hall. Mrs. Gustafsen represents the Pall Mall Gazette while here.

—Dahousie Lodge, F. and A. M., held its annual election of officers on Sunday night, and the following were chosen: W. M., A. L. Harwood; S. W., John Fisher; J. W., Geo. P. Whittemore; Treas., E. W. Gay; Sec., E. E. Morgan; Relief fund com., E. W. Gay and Chester H. Graves. The officers will be installed June 24th, at which time there will be a banquet and public exercises.

The Burned Bailey Building.

The Newtonville citizens who attended the hearing before the board of aldermen on Monday evening, were treated to a complete surprise. Mr. Cephas Brigham appeared for the owner of the building, and asked that proceedings be stopped, as the owner, Miss Martha E. Bailey, had not been notified. The permit issued for the removal of the building from Newton, to its present location on Newtonville square, was sent for, and it showed that the permit was issued to Martha E. Bailey. This put a stop to the proceedings, although there was a lively tilt between Messrs. Brigham and Stover, the latter stating that the building had been moved to its present location with the intent of compelling the citizens of Newtonville to buy the land upon which it stood, and Mr. Brigham repelling such an insinuation with considerable warmth. He said that it was moved there because the owner had no other spot on which to place it. He also said that the owner of the building had not yet been able to make a settlement with the insurance company, which had 60 days in which to repair it, if they thought best, and this limit only expired Monday night. For that reason he did not wish to accept service of the notice that evening, but he was willing to confer with the city solicitor, and thought an amicable arrangement could be made. Until the insurance was settled the hands of the owner were tied. If the case was pushed against them, they would appeal to the superior court for a trial by a jury, and would rather like to have such a trial. As the board was satisfied that proper notice had not been given, the hearing was closed, and the Newtonville citizens adjourned to the corridor of the City Hall, where they had a lively meeting, judging from the sounds that came through the closed doors to the aldermen's room.

The First Field Day.

The first field day for the season of the Newton Natural History Society will be held at Hammond's Pond next Saturday afternoon, June 19. Instead of taking barges, as has been the usual custom, the society will go to Chestnut Hill by the Circuit railroad, taking the train that leaves Boston at 2.25, and arriving at Chestnut Hill station at 3.19. A walk of half a mile up the railroad track and then another half mile through the woods will take the party to Hammond's Pond and some very interesting out-cropping ledges. This party will be under the leadership of Prof. S. E. Warren. It is expected that there will be an "outing" of the Appalachian Mountain Club the same afternoon and to the same place. This party will leave Boston at 2.35 by the Newton Centre train, arrive at Chestnut Hill at 2.57, and will be under the care of Dr. J. F. Frisbie.

The public are cordially invited to join the society on this and all of the field days during the season. For further information apply to Dr. J. F. Frisbie, Prof. S. E. Warren, John E. Alden, or Jesse Fewkes.

The price of the round trip will be as follows: From Newton to Chestnut Hill and return, 46 cts.; from Newtonville and return, 42 cts.; from West Newton and return, 36 cts.; from Auburndale and return, 32 cts.; from Boston to Chestnut Hill and return, 30 cts.

—Mr. Silas Frost is to erect a fine residence on the corner of Alpine street and Hillside avenue.

—James Ellis of Waltham street has been troubled by chicken thieves of late, having lost 20 chickens in one night.

—Nickerson Block is undergoing repairs on account of the settling. The masons are busily engaged putting up the staging.

—Wednesday was pay day at City Hall, and the treasurer's office did a large business.

—The lamp post at the corner of Washington and Wales street has been broken off close to the ground, probably by a recklessly driven team.

—The five students presented by the West Newton English Classical School for examination last week at the Institute of Technology were all admitted. One of them is a son of Mr. Huzzey of this ward.

—The Annual Conference of societies of Christian Endeavor is to be held at Saratoga, July 6, 7, 8. Reduced rates can be had on the railroads, and it is hoped that a large delegation from the four societies in our city will attend.

—The annual meeting of the Children's Aid Society is being held at the Pine Farm school, this (Friday) afternoon. Probably a successor to Superintendent Washburn will be elected.

—John McLane, a city laborer, was taken to the insane asylum at Worcester on Tuesday, as he had been for some days in a violent condition. He has a wife but no children.

—The Davis school house was broken into Tuesday night by some unknown parties, and in one room the desks damaged, ink spilt, and many of the scholars things taken.

—The lot of land containing 18,000 square feet, formerly owned by Michael Barry, and situated on Webster street, was sold Tuesday afternoon by J. F. C. Hyde to L. G. Pratt, Esq., for six cent a foot.

—Rev. A. E. Winship will preach in the Congregational church Sunday, at 10.45; and Flower Sunday will be observed in the evening at 6 o'clock, with appropriate services by the Sunday school and remarks by Mr. Winship.

—Next Sabbath being "Flower Sunday," or Children's Day, morning and evening services appropriate to its observance will be conducted at the Congregational church by Rev. A. E. Winship, of the New West Educational Commission.

—There have been 14 cases in the city court the past week, 2 for drunkenness; 1 for theft; 3 for assault; 2 for disturbing the peace and 5 boys were up for violating the city ordinance, concerning bathing in the Charles River.

—A lawn party is to be given by the ladies of the Congregational church, on the Parsonage grounds, June 17. Strawberry ice cream and cake for sale. A pleasant time is anticipated, and as the object is toward raising money for the church, there should be a large gathering.

—Officer Conroy's and James Devoy's bull dogs were stolen Wednesday, and the thief was traced to Boston, where he was found with one of the dogs, the other having been sold. The proceeds had evidently gone to buy liquor, and the thief was arrested and brought to the City Hall, Thursday. His name is George Brown, and he had just been bailed out of the house of correction, where he was sent from Waltham. As he had been in our court twice before, he is now serving out a long time for dog-stealing and drunkenness.

—The dedication services of the Myrtle Baptist chapel were held Sunday afternoon. The attendance was large and the decorations appropriate and tastefully arranged. The exercises were in charge of the Superintendent, Mr. F. A. Inman, and consisted of singing, choir and congregation; Invocation, Rev. Peter Smith; Opening Anthem, Quartet; Scriptural Reading by the pastor, Rev. F. Burrill; Prayer, Rev. W. H. Evans; Response, Quartet; Sermon, Rev. O. D. Kimball; Hymn, choir and congregation; Prayer of Dedication, Mr. H. A. Inman; Address of congratulation, Mr. Alfred L. Barbour; Hymn, choir and congregation. Rev. Mr. Kimball preached from the text "The House of God," and showed to his hearers in a forcible discourse, the respect and esteem in which the house of God should be held. The Superintendent followed, and in a few fitting words spoke of what the school had done the past year in fitting up the chapel, some $107 having been spent, and asked for a liberal collection, which was generously responded to, $20 being taken up. The address by Mr. Barbour was indeed one of congratulation; he referred to the faithful ones who had labored earnestly for many years in the school, of the success which had attended their work, and of the completion of the chapel. The exercises were attended with an earnestness on the part of all, which made it one of the most enjoyable occasions the school has ever held, and all who attended speak of it in the highest terms.

AUBURNDALE.

—Mr. Geo. F. Higgins is building a house on Orris street for Mr. Hastings.

—Rev. Mr. Metcalf sails on the 22d, by a steamer of the Gaion Line.

—Mr. William Shreve of Shreve, Crump & Low, has taken Capt. Rider's house for the summer.

—Mr. and Mrs. Alrams of Baltimore have arrived for their usual summer sojourn with their daughter, Mrs. John Bird. Their return is welcomed by many friends.

—Col. Wm. V. Hutchings and family of Boston will arrive at the Woodland Park Hotel the middle of June for a few weeks stay. Mr. A. B. Wilbur and family of Beacon street, Boston, are at the hotel for the month of June.

—Mrs. D'Ooge, daughter of Rev. I. R. Worcester, is spending a few weeks in her early home. She will be joined about July 1st by her husband, Prof. Martin L. D'Ooge of Ann Arbor University, and will sail for Athens, Greece, where they are to be engaged in teaching for a year.

—Judge Russell of the railroad commissioners and Messrs. Francis A. Walker and Charles H. Drew, constituting the special commission to apportion the expenses of widening and lengthening the Auburn street bridge, began their hearing on Saturday. Mr. S. C. Darling appeared for Middlesex county, and Judge Soule for the Boston & Albany.

—The choir of the Methodist Church sang last Sunday the fine anthem "Prepare ye the way of the Lord," by Garrett, in which the solos were taken by Mr. Kendall, Mrs. Kimball and Mr. Frank Morse. Mr. Morse also sang the beautiful song by Ambrose, "One sweetly solemn thought." Auburndale is justly proud of such a choir as this one has become under Mr. Kendall's training. By his taste in selecting choice music, and by his personal popularity, he has often secured for us the pleasure of hearing such artists as are rarely heard by a country congregation.

—The exhibition of the "American Hand Fire Annihilator" at Auburndale last week, which was witnessed by the Mayor, Chief Engineer, Chairman and Committee on Fire department, and others, was highly interesting and elicited hearty applause from the spectators. It is said that the loss of property by fire in the United States and Canada amounts to $120,000,000 a year. It has been the aim of Mr. Ballou, the inventor of this "annihilator," to prevent some part of this vast waste, by furnishing a convenient engine to be kept at hand ready for instant use, to prevent small fires from becoming large ones, and the success of this exhibition indicates that his purpose will be accomplished. While this machine is charged with powerful chemical destruction to fire on which they are thrown by their own force 25 or 30 feet away, it is so light and simple that it can be operated by any one, and if in general use many fires would be extinguished by it that otherwise would become disasters.

—Commencement exercises at Lasell Seminary began Thursday evening, with the pupils' concert, which was a very pleasant affair. On Sunday morning, Dr. Chas. W. Cushing, a former principal, will deliver the Baccalaureate sermon. On Monday evening will occur the class day exercises. On Tuesday evening is Principal Bragdon's reception for the senior class, and on Wednesday occur the commencement exercises of the graduating class, with the address by Rev. John H. Vincent, D. D. The afternoon will be taken up with the business meeting of the alumnae, the annual meeting of the board of trustees and the public literary exercises of the alumnae. At 4.30 the alumnae supper will be given. The sermon will be given in the Congregational church; the Wednesday morning services in the Methodist church, and the other exercises at the Seminary.

NONANTUM.

—Nonantum Mills pay off every Saturday.

—Children's day will be observed here by special service Sunday morning.

—Mr. C. A. Worth, who has been in the country for a month or more past, has returned looking the better for the rest.

—Dr. Vincent has taken rooms in the new house opposite the residence of the late Dr. Bradley on California street, and is ready for service at night or day.

—The strawberry festival at the North Evangelical Church last Tuesday evening was well attended and a very successful affair, adding materially to the fund for repairs on the building and grounds.

—Twenty-seven children graduate at the Eliot School this term. It is a fact worthy of note that although many of these children, who are mostly from 14 to 16 years of age, are the sons and daughters of working people, not one has left the class during the year, but each one who went into the class at the beginning of the year graduated, thus showing that the parents have co-operated with the teachers, many even at a sacrifice to themselves, for which they are entitled to much credit.

—The anniversary of the North Evangelical Sabbath School was held at the church last Sunday afternoon and evening. The edifice was well filled with an appreciative audience at both services. There were recitations by a number of the scholars and addresses by Mr. Henry Cobb, Mr. Charles Billings, Mr. D. E. Snow, Mr. Joshua Davis, E. D. Dyer and the Superintendent, Mr. Geo. F. Leonard, all of Newton, and all of whom have been more or less associated with the work here in former years. Mr. Billings gave a history of the school and pointed out the fact that the school was really twenty-seven years old, having been held at first in the summer months in the open air, by members of Eliot Church. But twenty-five years ago, Rev. Mr. Lowrey started the school, which has never suspended since. The services took the form of a commemorative service, being devoted to the life and work of Rev. Mr. Lowrey. The singing was by the junior school and was remarkably good, Mrs. Lewis conducting. The membership of the school at the present time, according to the report of the secretary, is 226. The treasurer's report shows more than $75 in the treasury, and so it is fair to judge that the school is in a very prosperous condition, under the watchful eye of the pastor, Rev. W. A. Lamb and his wife. It is to be expected that the good work begun by Mr. Lowrey will be faithfully carried on. Rev. E. E. Davidson of Newtonville, a scholar in this school in its early days, addressed the children, and Dr. Furber of Newton Centre spoke at length upon the early efforts of Mr. Lowrey and others. A fitting reference was made to Mrs. Ritchie, the old Scotch lady who opened her doors and sheltered the school during the winter weather of 1861 and 1862. At the close of the evening service Rev. W. A. Lamb presented the following resolutions, which were passed unanimously by the school and congregation:

The Sabbath School of the North Church at its twenty-fifth anniversary seeks the opportunity to pass and put on record the following:

Resolved, that we hereby express our gratitude to all our friends who have labored for our existence and progress, and especially do we express our gratitude to the dear, faithful friends of our mother—the Eliot Sabbath School—for their watchful parents' care and great assistance rendered at the present and in the days gone by.

NEWTON LOWER FALLS.

—The Newton GRAPHIC wants to call out the militia to overpower the hoodlums of Waltham and Newton. It is certain something should be done, but we have faith in the police of the two cities.—[Waltham City Record.]

—The depot master here has five shoe boxes, which were found in the woods near Rice's crossing, Tuesday morning. Michael Garvey, a railroad laborer, discovered them. Two of the boxes were unopened, one was half full of shoes, and two were empty. They had evidently been stolen from some freight train, and the thieves helped themselves to all they could carry away.

High School Association.

The committee on the first meeting of the Newton High School Association are progressing with the arrangements for the first reunion of the past members of the school. The following circular has been issued:

WEST NEWTON, June 1st, 1886.

At a meeting of past members of the Newton High School held at Newtonville, March 24, preliminary steps were taken toward forming an Alumni Association.

At that meeting two committees were appointed, the one to present a list of officers to be elected at a subsequent meeting in June, and the other with full powers to draw up a constitution, and to attend to other necessary details toward perfecting the organization, and to report at a general meeting to be held in June, at such time as they should decide.

A meeting for organization and social reunion has therefore been appointed for Thursday evening, June 24, 7.30 o'clock, at Armory Hall, Newton. At this meeting, after the necessary business has been transacted, there will be short literary exercises, social intercourse and refreshments.

It is intended that these meetings shall take place annually, and shall have for their object the renewing of school acquaintances.

For the purpose of defraying necessary expenses the assessment for this year has been fixed at 75 cents. Any one of the undersigned committee will receive this amount, and it is necessary that all assessments be paid before June 22.

You are cordially invited to join this association, as it is earnestly hoped that all will take an active interest in making this first meeting a success.

The husbands and wives of graduates are specially invited to be present on this occasion.

Committee—S. Warren Davis, '73; J. P. B. Fiske, '85; F. C. Partridge, '85; John A. Daniels, '83; Miss Bessie Hinkley, '85; Miss Mabel Hall, '84; Miss Fanny B. Carpenter, '83; Miss Lillian Eddy, '83; Miss Edith Page, '85; C. W. Burr, '85.

As the committee have been unable to obtain a complete and accurate list of all past members, it is hoped that all graduates who have not received the above circular will be present on this occasion.

High School Notes.

The notices of the Alumni Association for June 24 have been issued. Any alumni who has not received a notice is respectfully requested to send his name and address to Mr. F. C. Partridge, Newton.

Next week will be a short one for the scholars, as both Thursday and Friday will be holidays.

The next meeting of the Lyceum will be held at the High School Saturday evening, June 26, and will be well worth attending. There will not be another ministry, as it is deemed inexpedient. In order to remove all constitutional objections to such a course, a business meeting will be held, at which a motion to suspend the constitution will be made and carried.

Rumors are afloat that at last an addition to the High School building will be built, besides the drill shed spoken of last week.

Two questions that were asked many times during the last week were: "How did you pass your exams?" and "Do you know whether scholars' tickets are going to be issued?"

'86 winds up its last year at school in a manner befitting the class. On June 24 the meeting of the Alumni Association will be held; on June 26 the last meeting of the Lyceum is to be held; and on June 29 the graduating exercises take place. The Alumni Association was originated and started by members of '86. The Lyceum has been under the management of '86, and as a matter of course, they have charge of their own exercises.

Every member of '86 not on the staff are subscribers for the REVIEW. We think that this is the first time that this has been the case, and hope it may be the same in the '87 next year.

All candidates for the Institute of Technology from the N. H. S. passed without condition, so far as is known.

The tournament of the N. H. S. L. T. C. commenced Thursday at 2.30 p. m. on the Richardson

Allen's Pond. Second Season.

THE SEASON OF 1886 WILL OPEN JUNE 7. AFTERNOONS ONLY, EXCEPTING SATURDAYS, TILL JUNE 23.

This pond is the enlargement of the pure and never failing "Cheese Cake," near its source. It is secluded, fenced in and supplied with dressing rooms, swimming-post, spring-board, etc. The number of dressing rooms has been doubled, and the depth of the water increased six inches. Arrangements have been made by which the water can be drawn from the bottom during the day, thus raising the temperature several degrees. The sheet of water—5,000 square feet—is divided by a floating boom into two parts for safety, and is from 6 inches to 5½ feet in depth. The record of the last season shows that this pond meets a real want as yet unsupplied by our city, many of both sexes learning to swim therein. The hours assigned to women have been doubled, and swimming lessons for both sexes will be given in the most approved methods.

Bathers will wear tight or suits and provide their own towels. Suits and towels, if marked, can be left in care of the attendants, for which a small charge will be made. Strangers may similarly be furnished with towels, etc.

Selections from Emerson.

Borrowing Trouble.

Some of your hurts you have cured,
And the sharpest you still have survived,
But what tortures of grief you endured
From evils that never arrived.

Heroism.

So nigh is grandeur to our dust,
So near is god to man,
When duty whispers low, "Thou must,"
The youth replies, "I can."

Nature.

Nature beats in perfect tune,
And rounds with rhymes her every rune.
Whether she work on land or sea,
Or hide underground her alchemy,
Thou canst not wave thy staff in air,
Or dip thy paddle in the lake,
But it curves the line of beauty there,
And the ripples in rhymes the car forsake.

True Service.

Not to scatter bread and gold,
Goods and raiment bought and sold,
But to hold fast his simple sense,
And speak the speech of innocence;
For he that feeds men serveth few—
He feeds all who dares be true.

A Legend of State Street.

[S. H. Gooch in Boston Transcript.]

There are many now living who can recall the incidents of the following narrative, as related to them by elder people, who were themselves contemporaries, and perhaps participants. It was in war time, not the war of the American Revolution, but that later struggle in which the infant republic asserted and maintained her equal rights on the ocean with the mistress of the seas.

It is not to be denied that a large portion of New England was bitterly averse to this second contest with the mother country. We had spoiled the British Crown of its brightest jewel, and henceforth the conservatives, always a powerful element at the North, were willing to "treat the people of England in peace as friends, in war as enemies," the former ardently preferred. But party politics ran high, and the war was regarded by many of the leading citizens as a political manoeuvre with which patriotism had little to do. We make no apology for this state of public sentiment among our worthy and honored ancestors, nor do we propose to discuss how far a citizen is morally bound to support his Government, right or wrong. The shipping interests had greatly suffered along the coast of New England.

Commerce was paralyzed. Shipyards were idle. Thousands were out of employment, the grass literally growing in the streets, and good vessels rotting at the wharves. During the war, the thinly settled seacoast of the far down East furnished many stirring incidents and hairbreadth escapes. From their close proximity to the British provinces, the seafaring people of Maine were constantly exposed to plunder and depredation. Their vessels were often captured and burnt in front of their ports of destination. The dangers of the seas were scarcely thought of in comparison with the risks from the enemy.

Yet a certain amount of maritime trade was carried on, for the profits were large and tempting, and there was nothing else that they could do with their vessels. At this time, and for how long we have no means of knowing, a nice little contraband traffic did exist between some portions of New England and the provinces, by which "aid and comfort" were given to the enemy, and grave annoyance to the Federal Government. The latter was making every effort to ferret out the parties, whoever they were, and bring them to a stern settlement.

Confiscation and banishment would be the mildest penalties for such great offences in time of war. These facts were all well known everywhere, "down East and along shore," by the coasters and lumbermen, an amphibious class, who divided their time between land and water, as much at home on the one as the other.

It was at the close of a sultry day in August. A slight breeze rippled the water at the mouth of a wide creek on the coast of Maine, where the deep soundings, and dense forests, with a mountain stream in the background, had already attracted a colony of hardy shipbuilders with their families. A saw-mill and a grist-mill had been erected. There was a vessel on the stocks "building on shares," half-a-dozen comfortable log houses with their clearings, and some respectable meadow land.

But the pine woods were very dark around the settlement, and the bears and wolves would prowl in the night about the out-houses, and sometimes cross the creek in the daytime just below the schoolhouse in sight of the children from the windows. One narrow road passed through the hamlet to a similar settlement ten miles away. This road was grass-grown and full of stumps, and in traversing it one would likely meet with some wild animal, a wolverine or catamount, or perhaps a bear; seldom a human being. But the blast of war had reached this remote corner of the world, and awakened its usual dismal echoes.

The vessel, half built, and intended for the West India trade, would not be wanted at present, and the year's work would have to go to meet their bills in Portland and Boston, for stores and ship chandlery.

The sun was just setting along the level water, lighting up the surface with a blaze of crimson. A lot of weary, anxious-looking men were lounging on the beach discussing of the events of the day, while their sweethearts and wives were getting ready the evening meal, and sweeping their hearths for the evening gossip.

"I'll be hanged," said McKenzie, a stalwart shipwright, "if I like the way these Boston traders have of making money out of this, while we poor folks have to pay out debts all the same, and come out at the little end of the horn!"

"Yes," replied the quiet little millowner; "when I was up in the Sally Ann, with Captain Tibbetts, I heard them talking about it at Henshaw's where we buy our stuff. They said there was a gang of them in the smuggling business, and all their letters and papers are written in a hog Latin, or secret signs, so that nobody could read them 'cept them that has the key. You understand?"

"Oh, aye! we know. It's all as easy as printing, when you know the trick. But that's the mischief of it. Them Boston fellows are no fools. They are all educated men, and go to college 'fore they go into trade. So what's name's clerk told me."

"I should like to get hold of some of that correspondence," observed an earnest youth who was studying navigation in his leisure hours, and looking forward to a master's berth, as the highest pinnacle of earthly ambition; "guess I would try some 'fore I'd give it up. There's lots of prize money in that job, and the first man that unravels it gets an A. No. 1 ticket from Uncle Sam, and his fortune is made."

At this moment the horn sounded the usual call to supper, a signal that never need be repeated for such men.

"Scarcely were they started on the path homeward when their steps were arrested by the report of a heavy gun seaward, and turning, they saw in the offing, a large Chebeco boat laying to, the powder smoke curling upward from her decks.

A little distance off, and between her and the shore, were two sailboats, each making the best of what little wind was stirring. The one in advance was a small skiff, and evidently trying to get away from the other.

This unusual spectacle, with the warlike echoes all at once in this quiet spot seemed to quicken the pulses of the peaceful village. A closer scrutiny revealed to their practiced eyes the cut and character of the sails in sight.

The one in the rear was the well-known coast-guard, from down below, and the other was a sailboat belonging to the larger craft, to whose protection it was endeavoring to escape.

In less time than it takes to tell it, they comprehended the whole situation, and rushing each for his gun, they took to their boats, shipped their oars, and bore down the creek, to lend a willing hand, if need be, in the skirmish. Meanwhile the skiff had reached the side of the larger vessel, and was hoisted aboard. Her head fell off before the wind, and being beyond the highlands, she began rapidly to leave the waters so suddenly disturbed.

"A stern chase is a long one. Ship ahoy!" shouted our friend McKenzie to the guard boat; "but you came plaguery nigh overhauling that midget of a skiff. What vessel is that? and what's he about round here?"

"Oh, that's one of the Pinksterns," said Robinson, the skipper, "that the Government is after so bad. Wish we could have boarded her, but she's too light in the heels, and carries too much metal for the likes of us. Thanks to ye all, though, for your good will! You see I overhauled that skiff in one of the coves down here—came upon him all at once—knew by his actions he was up to no good. Soon as he twigg'd my pennant, he up keelogs and off—fore you could say Jack Robinson, that's my name. So I chased him, in course, and that's what I was doin' when you first saw me."

"Should think you could have run him down, 'thout he had a big start on ye," they all said.

"So I could," he replied, "if he hadn't thrown over something unbeknown to me, as he thought, but I had my eye on him. Just as soon as I see that dodge, I slackened up, and watched cuss along till I came to this buoy, do you see; and that copper thing was hanging down from it. Before I could haul it in and get it stowed away snug, he was gone. But I'd like to had my boat-hook in that blue nose and make him tell what he knows. Never mind, boys, Jack Robinson has got something here," pointing to the mysterious canister, "that'll make Uncle Sam smile."

"What do you think it is, Pub. Doe?"

"Jes so," said Robinson, with a wink, "public documents that'll puzzle a Philadelphia lawyer to make out. It's all about that contraband business, you may bet on that. I'm goin' straight down to Portland and give it to the collector, unsight, unseen—"

"Robinson, you're a fool!" said Leighton, the young man before mentioned, who wished he could have a chance at the secret writings.

"You had better open it yourself first, and see what it looks like. 'Tain't the collector's property, it belongs to you."

"No, it don't," was the gruff reply, "I'm in the Government service, and blamed if my superiors don't have the first chance of breakin' the seal."

"How do you know that you'll ever get a red cent, even if it turns out to be what you think it is?"

"Well, I couldn't read a word anyhow, if it was plain English."

"But there's some of us here that can," was the reply; "you can seal it up after we find out what it is, and then you can take it along to Portland, if you want, and make your bargain with the big bugs."

"Leighton is about my way of thinking," said McKenzie; "you know they do tell hard stories about the collector, and some say he's no better than a smuggler himself."

"Now the value of this package, whatever it might be, accrued to the finder, but it is doubtful whether his highest conceptions ever went beyond a thousand or two, of 'Spanish milled dollars,' all in one pile.

There was an intercepted correspondence, worth, if properly managed, hundreds of thousands; but Robinson, the lucky finder, was as ignorant as a boor and stubborn as a mule.

"Come, Jack!" they all chimed in, "haul up tonight, and let's have a good time all round, on the strength of it."

Yielding to the hospitality of old cronies, the lateness of the hour, and the prospect of "a good time" ashore, he joined the other boats in their course back again up the creek, making the shores echo with their shouts, and startling the owls and wild-cats in their solitudes.

The next morning, all hands, fresh as ever after their jollification, turned out to see Robinson and his assistant embark.

But to their surprise, the Chebeco boat was just discernible off the coast, evidently waiting for him to come out, very lucky it was for Robinson that he had put in over night, or he would most likely have lost the papers, and perhaps his life. All that day the enemy kept in sight, but under cover of night Robinson slipped away and escaped.

Not knowing what might happen on the voyage, he detached the canister from the buoy and packed it in an old nail keg, which he stowed away among the rubbish in the run.

Some days after, a rough-looking seaman entered the custom house at Portland, with a cask under his arm, and inquired for the collector.

"There's the deputy," said an usher, he will fix you out."

"No, I want to see Uncle Sam, himself."

"Then you will have to wait for him, he's busy."

"Well, I can wait," he replied, sitting down on his nail keg, and presenting in that attitude, as a wretched clerk remarked, "a striking tableau of 'Commerce and Navigation,'" like the picture on some of their bill heads.

As the merchant who had been closeted with the collector came out briskly from the private office, he stumbled over the sailor and was nearly upset by the collision. Rather ominous for him, considering what had been the subject of their interview together.

The collector appearing, to apologize, recognized Robinson at once as belonging to the secret service, and admitted him into the private sanctum.

The copper cylinder was opened and found to contain papers and documents, all in an unknown tongue. No one in the custom house could understand a word of it. All the learned experts far and near tried their skill in vain.

At last the accomplished wife of Simon Greenleaf, then a lawyer in Portland, and afterward professor of law at Harvard University, discovered the key to the cryptographic characters, and rendered the whole into plain English.

The evidence thus unravelled implicated some of the leading merchants in Boston, Salem and elsewhere, and the papers suddenly became of immense value to somebody. The man who had the best claim in them was put off by the wily collector with assurances "that it was all right; only leave it to him, and it would make them all rich, but it must be carefully managed," etc., etc.

Robinson, being unable to read or write, and, besides, being of drunken habits, did leave it entirely to him, receiving from time to time such small sums as he needed to live upon.

Then these payments became fewer and less in amount, till finally they ceased altogether. Other parties, inflamed by Robinson's statements, came forward and made up a purse in a kind of joint-stock company, taking a legal transfer from him of all his titles and interest as the original captor, buying out his claim to any reward or emolument, and advancing to said Robinson a certain specified sum monthly. The "case" now assumed a new aspect.

The new parties, some of whom were prominent politicians and men of substance, took possession of the papers. The collector, it was alleged, had feathered his own nest, with money from State street and elsewhere. He was set aside, and direct appeal was made to the Government at Washington for remuneration. Members of Congress were applied to, and favored it.

At length, Daniel Webster, then a rising lawyer, was consulted. He gave a verbal opinion that they had an undoubted claim for several hundred thousand dollars, and agreed to take the case in hand himself. As soon as this was made known "Down East" that Daniel Webster had taken up the Robinson case, the stock went up famously. Shares were divided and subdivided, and changed hands at high figures. Robinson had nothing to do but to live on his laurels, indulging his appetite for liquor without restraint, his family in clover for the time being.

After a while Webster abandoned the case. He said their claim was a just one, and they would undoubtedly succeed, but his time was so much occupied with other matters, or he would be happy to manage it for them. The truth was, that as he looked into it he found such a list of names that he was professionally afraid of it. For the same reason they found it impossible to secure the services of any leading lawyer. Perhaps retaining fees had some influence. Thus the "case" languished for years, between hope and fear. Robinson, meanwhile, had a loathsome burden to carry. Finally he was attacked by a cancerous affection in the head, that consumed away one side of his face, and a portion of his neck. His throat was tied up with towels to enable him to breathe, and in this condition he died. He was supported to the last, and his funeral expenses paid by the shareholders of the Robinson fund, who still retained confidence in their ultimate success. But not a dollar ever came back again during that generation.

The father of the narrator was a young man in those days, a trader on the coast of Maine, and one of the victims of this unfortunate speculation. The incidents above related was often the theme of discussion in the evening circles before a blazing wood fire, when our boys would say, "Father, tell us all about the Robinson affair!"

Many years after this, in the year 18—, his widow received a line from Professor Simon Greenleaf at Cambridge, Mass., requesting her to call at his office, and receive $100 in full settlement of all interest in the claim of John Robinson es. United States. The money was welcome, and no questions asked, a reticence that has been deeply regretted ever since. Where it came from, how obtained, and who paid it after so long a lapse of years, are profound mysteries. Perchance this sketch may meet the eye of some one who can throw light upon the subject.

The writer merely gives his recollections of a tradition handed down from the generation before him, with some assistance from a family diary, kept for over half a century.

The True Object of Free Public Schools.

[From The Citizen.]

The reasons for furnishing free education to the individuals composing a community will vary in accordance with the idea upon which the organization of that community is based.

If the State (e. g., the community acting as a whole for a common purpose) is a communistic body controlling, and taking the proceeds of the labor of each individual to itself, it is evidently bound to provide him in return, not only with free instruction, but with free food, shelter, clothing, care in sickness and old age, and, in short, with everything requisite to his well-being.

But our form of government wisely recognizes the right of the individual to personal independence, with the right to labor for his own proper benefit, and the duty to provide, for himself and those who are dependent upon him, the essentials enumerated above. It also leaves to him the formation of organizations for religious and social purposes. It may be stated, broadly, that the State only interferes with the affairs of the individual, or assumes any part of them, when it is necessary to do so in order to secure some benefit to itself; or, in other words, to promote the welfare of the whole.

Now while the right of suffrage is accorded to every citizen, practically giving to the majority absolute control of State affairs, it is, evidently, of the greatest importance that he should be possessed of a general knowledge of the principles upon which a proper conduct of such affairs is based, and of their practical application.

And herein lies the reason for the establishment of free public schools. The State gives free instruction to all, in order that they may be properly qualified to perform their civic duties.

It follows, then, that the course and method of instruction should be adapted to secure the end in view. The State should receive its "quid pro quo." The object of the establishment is not, primarily, to qualify the scholars for the practice of professions, for undertaking business operations, for private ends, or personal emolument; it is only to enable them to exercise understandingly the duties of citizenship.

The proper preparation for this special instruction involves the necessity of giving to them a good general education, which will be equally applicable to other and personal objects, but it shall ever be borne in mind that these advantages are incidental to, and not the main object of, the establishment.

The pupil should be taught to realize that he owes a debt to the State for his education, which he is bound in honor to repay by, at the first, diligently learning, and, subsequently, well and faithfully performing, his civic duties.

C. F. CREHORE.

Newton Lower Falls, Mass.

What a Business Man thinks of the Pennsylvania Limited.

[From the New York Times.]

I have just finished one of the pleasantest railway trips I have ever had," said a prominent merchant, as he alighted from the Pennsylvania Limited at Jersey City last evening. "I had no idea," he continued, "that the railroad people had reduced the art of travel to such perfection. A business trip becomes a merry holiday full of comfort, pleasure, and good cheer."

"I received a telegram at my house, up town, Tuesday morning at 7.30 a. m., urging my presence in Chicago by noon of Wednesday, if it were possible to accomplish the journey in that time. It seemed almost impracticable, but I remember that the Limited left New York at 9.00 a. m., and hastily packing my bag, started for Desbrosses Street Ferry without waiting for breakfast. The train left Jersey City at 9.15, and as it whirled over the meadows, I sought the dining car and seated myself at a neat and flowered adorned table, where I enjoyed a delightful breakfast of all the delicacies of the season, admirably cooked, and served with scrupulous neatness. The sensation of taking a meal while flying onward at the rate of forty-five miles an hour is not only novel, but appetizing. The smoking-car, with its luxurious sofas and ease-giving rattan chairs, I found to be the most comfortable apartment, and after reading the morning paper I joined a party at cards, and the hours flew by so swiftly that we had stopped at Philadelphia and Harrisburg and were rolling along the banks of the Juniata before we realized that we had traveled nearly three hundred miles. The view from the car windows engrossed our attention from this time until the curtain of night fell on the scene. This section of the route abounds in the most beautiful scenery imaginable. The road lies through and over the Alleghany Mountains, and after following the banks of the blue Juniata for many miles, the actual climbing of a mountain begins a short distance east of Altoona. Our third stop of five minutes was made at Altoona, after having completed an uninterrupted run of one hundred and thirty-two miles. The most magnificent portion of the route from a scenic standpoint lies beyond Altoona, where the grand sweep of the Horse shoe Curve, and the subsequent ascent of Alleghippus, reveals some of the wildest scenery in America. We viewed this just before sunset, when all the mountains were bathed as the poets say, in glory. It was a grand sight."

"The dinner served about this hour, was excellent, and comprised in the menu everything one could expect at a first-class New York restaurant. All the meats and vegetables are cooked as they are ordered, and cooked well, too."

"Another short stop at Pittsburg, and one at Alliance, is the last that I remember, as I turned in about this time, and when I awakened the next morning we were somewhere between Fort Wayne and Chicago. I could not resist the temptation to take breakfast on the Limited, which was hardly finished before the train came to its final stop in the Union Depot, Chicago. This was 9.30, twenty-four hours and a half after leaving New York. I felt as fresh as a daisy. Met my appointment, loafed around an hour or so with friends, took the East-bound train at 5 that afternoon, and here I am back in New York at 6.55 p. m. Thursday. Isn't that business? Not only business but pleasure. I can assure you, for I feel as if I had enjoyed a regular, old-fashioned boy's holiday."

"I hope I have not bored you with this enthusiastic recital, and think you might write it up for the benefit of those who travel. My advice to travelers to Pittsburg, Chicago, or Cincinnati is, 'Take the Limited.' Good-bye."

Oak Bluffs and Nantucket.

Cottage City is being rapidly prepared for the advent of summer sojourners, and bids fair to become more popular the coming season than ever before. The gas company is now ready to furnish gas for the lighting and heating of cottages, and electric lights are to be used at the camp meeting grounds and tabernacles; also a steam engine and pump, with a large iron tank will be used for irrigation. At Nantucket, new hotels are contemplated, and with the excellent accommodations already there, it is fast becoming a favorite resort, especially for those exhausted with business or household cares, and in need of a quiet place with cool, invigorating air, soothing to the mind and nerves. Many go there early in the season to enjoy the excellent blue-fishing, which cannot be excelled by any spot on our coast. A fine new steamboat is being built to take the place of one of the boats which was found too small for the constantly increasing business.

A telegraph cable has already been laid between the island and mainland, which will enable business men to spend a few days there, and still be in communication with the outside world.

French wit: In a Parisian cafe: A patron pays his score. "Well, and how about the waiter?" asks the garcon, who presents the bill. "The waiter!" replies the customer in astonishment. "Why, I don't remember having eaten him!"

A BEAUTIFUL EASTER CARD.

MURDERED.

The body of Julius Baer was found by freighters five miles west of here Tuesday morn, in a terribly mangled condition. His head and face were smashed, so as to be hardly recognized, and numerous wounds were found on his body. Mr. Baer was agent for the great blood medicine, Sulphur Bitters. Robbery was undoubtedly the motive, as he was well known to have a large sum of money on his person. As we go to press there is no clue to the perpetrators.—Colorado Press.

PROBABLY NEVER

In the history of proprietary medicines has any article met success at home equal to that which has been poured upon Hood's SARSAPARILLA. Why, such has been the success of this article, that nearly every family in whole neighborhoods have been taking it at the same time. Every week brings new evidence of the wonderful curative properties of this medicine.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Combines the Best Remedies of the vegetable kingdom, and in such proportion as to derive their greatest medicinal effects with the least disturbance to the whole system. In fact this preparation is so well balanced in its action upon the alimentary canal, the liver, the kidneys, the stomach, the bowels and the circulation of the blood, that it brings about a healthy action of the entire human organism, that can hardly be credited by those who have not seen the remarkable results that have followed its use. If the Sarsaparilla does not prove sufficiently laxative, take a few doses of Hood's VEGETABLE PILLS. It is well in all cases of biliousness to take these pills in connection with the Sarsaparilla for the first ten days. That dull, sleepy, sick feeling can be wholly overcome by the use of these remedies. Will you give them a trial and be yourself again?

An ex-alderman of this city says of Hood's Sarsaparilla, "It is the strongest Sarsaparilla I ever saw."

Each dollar bottle contains one hundred (averages) doses. Sold by all druggists.

Price one dollar, or six for five dollars. Hood's Sarsaparilla, prepared only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass.

NEWTON COTTAGE HOSPITAL.

DEDICATORY EXERCISES, AND DESCRIPTION OF THE BUILDING.

The Newton Cottage Hospital was opened and dedicated Saturday afternoon, and is now in successful operation. A long felt want in the city has been filled, and hereafter the sick of the city can be properly cared for. It is estimated that at least two thousand people, a large majority of whom were ladies, visited the hospital on its opening day, and inspected the arrangements and the building.

THE DEDICATORY EXERCISES

were held in the men's ward, where all of the guests that could find room were gathered. Rev. John Worcester called the meeting to order, and Hon. R. M. Pulsifer, president of the hospital corporation, read a short address, giving the main facts in the history of the hospital. He said that the first step towards it was one dark night, when a physician and a clergyman of the city were called to see a poor woman, a stranger in the city, who was thought to be dying. She was found alone in a poor tenement, and, after her immediate sufferings had been relieved, the question arose as to who would care for her the remainder of the night. The hour was late, the neighbors, who were few and scattered, had retired, and the two gentlemen had a weary tramp before a nurse was found. It was on this night that the agitation for a city hospital first took definite shape, and the clergyman, who had ever since maintained a warm interest in the hospital, went to the mayor of the city (Mr. Pulsifer), and asked him if he would enlist in the movement for a hospital. The mayor consented, and a meeting was held in the High School building. At that meeting an interest was shown, and the movement got a good start. From this meeting other meetings were held, and a legal corporation formed and a board of trustees elected. The matter of a location was a difficult problem to solve. After many meetings and consultations the present site was selected. The lot contains nine acres, and is sufficient to accommodate all the charitable institutions Newton would require for a century. After securing the land, he said, the question was what kind of a building to erect. The services of W. P. Wentworth, architect, who has had considerable experience in the construction of hospitals, was secured, and the result was the adoption of the plan of the present building, although the plan has been considerably modified on the score of economy. The furnishing of the hospital has been done by the Ladies' Aid Association. He thanked all who had so generously given for the object, and the physicians who have volunteered their services. The receipts from all sources, he said, on account of the hospital, were $11,606.18, all of which has been expended for purchasing the land and erecting the building. About $2,000 is due for the heating apparatus and on the building contract. The cost of the land was $3,700; the balance had been expended for the erection of the building. The Ladies' Aid Association had expended for furnishing the hospital $2246.92. At some future time it was the intention to add another ward to the building for women, but at present the women's ward would be located up stairs in the main building. In conclusion, the speaker paid a hearty tribute to Rev. Dr. Shinn, the clergyman who had first conceived the idea of a hospital in Newton, and who had been tireless in his work for it ever since; also to the clerk of the corporation, Dr. E. A. Whiston, who had given liberally of his time and advice, for which his education and ability so well fitted him, and he also thanked the other friends of the movement who had done their part in helping it along.

REV. DR. SHINN

then offered the dedicatory prayer, which was as follows:

"Almighty God, we give Thee praise that we are permitted this day to see the fruition of efforts to provide here a hospital for the care and treatment of those who, in the chances and changes of this mortal life, are overtaken by accident, or disabled by disease. Thy blessing has been with us thus far. Continue Thy favor, that this may be a shelter for the weary, a house of mercy for the suffering, and a place of healing for the sick, through our Saviour Christ. O Lord Jesus, who didst take our nature upon Thee, and became man that Thou mightst pity our sorrows and heal our infirmities, look graciously upon all who enter here. Be to them the Great Physician, and cause them to see in the faces of those who minister to them Thy blessed face, ever pitiful and kind, ever loving and gracious. And while they seek health and soundness here for their bodies, do Thou give that greater blessing, the healing of the woes of their souls, and the peace that passeth all understanding. Hear us, O Thou gracious Saviour! Blessed Spirit of all goodness, who dost put into the hearts of men right desires, and who, by Thy mighty power dost overcome human selfishness, and make men tender and pitiful and brotherly, we beseech Thee to incline the sympathies of the people of this city towards this hospital, that it may always be well supported. Especially touch the hearts of those whom Thou hast made the stewards of Thy bounty, that they may see in this institution the call for enlarged beneficence, and for such a share of the means Thou hast entrusted to them that the foundations may be laid of still larger ministrations in the time to come. Give skill to the physicians, and surgeons, and nurses, and a firm reliance upon Thy guidance and blessing. Give wisdom to all who have now, or who may have in the future, the management of this institution, that what they do may be well done. To all who are employed here in any capacity, grant Thy holy inspiration and guidance, that they may realize the sacredness of this work and its blessedness, and be partakers of its joy. And now, O gracious God, with deep feelings of solemnity, and with the conviction that we need Thy blessing, we dedicate this hospital to the purposes for which it was begun. O may it be for the welfare of the suffering and for the glory of Thy name, whom we worship as Father, Son and Holy Ghost, one God, blessed and gracious for evermore."

DESCRIPTION OF THE BUILDING.

Ground was broken for the hospital about a year ago, but the work has not been pushed, as it was thought best not to open it until the Circuit road was completed. It is located on Washington street, within a short distance of Woodland station, being on high land, and stands back from the street several hundred feet. The building is constructed of wood, with a central building of two stories, and a wing of one story, the connection between the two buildings being a long corridor. In the central building, opening from the hall on the left is the reception room, the physicians' room and the apothecaries' room. On the right of the hall is the operating room, recovery room, dining room and kitchen. Opening out of the latter is the laundry. Up stairs is the women's ward with eight beds, two private rooms, a children's ward with four beds, and the servants' quarters. In the wing is located the men's ward, containing 10 beds, a private room, sitting room and nurses' room. The finish throughout the building is hard plaster, cypress and hard pine. The size of the main building is 70x30. The wing in which the men's ward is located is 40x40, the ward proper being 20x40. This ward has a large brick fireplace, and a sun room. Under each bed is a ventilator. The building is heated by steam, and the most improved system of ventilation has been adopted.

THE HOSPITAL BENEFACTORS.

The citizens of Newton have responded liberally towards furnishing the hospital. The Merry Workers of Newton furnished the children's ward in the most thorough manner. Mrs. D. R. Emerson furnished the reception room, which is a very handsome and pleasant place; the Newtonville Women's Guild, the dining room; Channing Church, the operating room and recovery room; Grace Church, Newton, and St. Mary's Church, Newton Lower Falls, each a private patient's room; Mrs. E. T. Eldridge of Newtonville, a nurse's room; Mrs. J. Wesley Kimball, a children's room for special patients; the Sunday Schools of the city, the kitchen; Eliot Church, the matron's room; Mrs. William Parsons, a special child's room; the ladies of West Newton, a nurse's room; the Misses Loring of Newton Centre, a patient's sitting room; the Country Week club at Newton Centre, $150 for expenses of children's ward; Mrs. Dr. Bates, a hall clock and silver water filter; the daughter of the late Mrs. Valentine, a large illustrated family Bible and stand, in memory of her mother. There are undoubtedly other gifts which were overlooked in the hurried inspection of the hospital. The beautiful display of flowers and pot plants for the opening day were furnished by Mr. Henry Ross, superintendent of the Newton Cemetery, Mrs. E. L. Collins and others.

THE MEDICAL STAFF

is made up of physicians of the leading schools of practice, and is as follows, with their time of service: Massachusetts Medical Society, J. F. Frisbie, June and July; J. H. HOW SUPPORTED.

The institution will be supported by voluntary contributions, annual membership fees, and by the receipts from such patients as are able to pay. Any applicant for free treatment must be a resident of Newton, and must be recommended by a physician of Newton. Patients will usually be received at the hospital only between the hours of 9 and 11 a. m. In case of emergency the matron may receive patients upon the recommendation of any physician of the city. Patients may choose, upon their admission to the hospital, the school of medicine by which they shall be treated. When no preference is expressed, the matron will assign them in alternate order to the two schools.

The officers of the hospital corporation are: President, R. M. Pulsifer; vice-president, E. W. Converse; clerk, E. A. Whiston; treasurer, G. S. Bullens. The executive committee is William P. Ellison, Newton; Rev. John Worcester, Newtonville; Mrs. M. L. Bacon, West Newton; Mrs. R. R. Bishop, Newton Centre, and Otis Pettee, Newton Upper Falls.

The post office address of the hospital is Newton Lower Falls.

Curiosities.

One of the lay brethren, a few evening since, likened the founders of Springfield to Daniel in Babylon, who is said to have been unpalatable to the lions because he was about two-thirds backbone and the rest pure grit.—[Springfield Union.]

The other evening, at a concert, a long-haired pianist was punishing the instrument with epileptic gestures, and evolving what was supposed to be descriptive music. An old lady went into ecstasies of admiration. "How fine! she exclaimed; "one can hear the roar of the cannon; the town has been taken by assault; they are fighting in the streets; the soldiers are already giving themselves up to pillage—the—"Oh!" sighed a neighbor, "if the soldiers could only carry off the piano!"—[French Fun.]

An Eastern man, who was travelling in the South-West, came across a railroad which was paying many of its employees less than seventy-five cents per day, and he inquired why they did not strike. "Only makes matters worse," was the reply. "But how could it?" "Well, we tried it when we were getting ninety cents a day, and the president got us together and made such a speech against labor grinding the life out of capital that we hired back to the company at seventy-three. We ain't the sort of fellows to go at it and squeeze the life blood out of a corporation paying its president only $25,000 a year."—[Wall-street News.]

We came along to a cross-roads in Alabama, where a colored justice of the peace was about to open court, and it was proposed that we halt for an hour or two and witness operations. The case to come on was between two colored men, one of whom charged the other with having stolen a hoe. There were neither lawyers nor jury, but the judge called up the plaintiff and said: "Mr. Burrows, how many witnesses has you got dat Mr. Bunker stole dat hoe?" "Two, sah." "Mr. Bunker how many witnesses has you got dat you neber took dat hoe, no where?" "Fo', sah." "Den I shall dismiss de case an' Mr. Burrows mus' pay de costs. Ebery one knows dat fo' witnesses can sw'ar harder dan two witnesses, an' it am no use gwine ahead to take up de valuable time of dis court." Mr. Burrows paid about $3 costs, and as he was going away his honor continued: "Next time is gwine ter sue a man you wants mo' witnesses dat he's got or you are gwine to be left. Dis court will now adjourn an' go fishin'."

The faculty, trustees, graduates, patrons, and members of other similar institutions, dined at Sturtevant Hall on the Hill, and concluded the occasion with several strong and interesting addresses on the past, present, and future of this seat of sacred learning.

On the medical staff at the Newton Cottage Hospital from this ward, Dr. J. H. Bodge of the Massachusetts Medical Society, for August and September; Dr. S. A. Sylvester of the Massachusetts Homoeopathic Society, for October and November; Dr. Robert P. Loring is one of the consulting surgeons.

The Newton Theological Institution began its career at an old house on Waverly avenue, near the Horback estate, in 1825. There Prof. Ira Chase, whose name has been given to one of the most beautiful streets leading to the Hill, met and taught two or three students. Since then hundreds of young men have studied at "Newton," and carried the memories of its verdant landscape with them around the world.

The examinations on the Hill were held on Monday and Tuesday, and passed off very creditably. In the absence of a pastor, Prof. English had charge of proffering the hospitality of the villagers to the guests of the occasion. On Wednesday the Alumni Association took supper at the Sturtevant Hall; at the close of the graduating exercises on Thursday, all visitors were served a substantial collation in the church, Tufts of Boston being caterer; the members of Middle Class having charge of the service.

The Alumni of Newton gathered in large numbers at the Baptist Church on Wednesday afternoon at four o'clock. The address was given by Rev. F. L. Hazlewood of Lynn. Subject, "The Importance of the Study of Nature by the Theologian." Mr. Hazlewood's argument was a strong and forcible plea for the study of the book of Nature, as the counterpart of the book of Revelation. His close argument was followed with deep interest throughout. Dr. J. Wheaton Smith of Philadelphia presided. The annual dinner was served in Sturtevant Hall. At the business meeting the following officers of the alumni association were elected: President, Rev. H. C. Graves, class of '50; vice-president, Rev. S. W. Duncan, class of '64; secretary, Prof. C. R. Brown, class of '70; orator, Rev. H. F. Colby, class of '67; substitute, Prof. E. B. Andrews, class of '74. In the evening the annual address before the Knowles Rhetorical Society was delivered by Rev. George C. Lorimer, D. D. The members of the old board of trustees were re-elected. Associate Professors Burton and Brown were advanced to full professors. The treasurer reported that the revenue for the year was sufficient to meet the expenses.

The class of '86—Theological—will long remember the field flowers with which the platform, organ, and walls were garnished at their graduation. Only wild flowers were used; chains of daisies were festooned, and gathered up with ferns and buttercups. The whole was very artistic, and exceedingly creditable to the ladies who designed and executed the arrangement so cleverly.

The entertainment at the Baptist church, on the eve of commencement day, was given by the Rev. G. C. Lorimer, D. D., of Chicago, and the Ruggles street Quartet of Boston. Dr. Lorimer's text was, "Justice, Justice, Justice!" It was a high attribute of the Almighty, which, if taken on by us poor, erring mortals would jump us to the millennium. We should in charity clothe the naked and feed the hungry; but if we would be just we would not have so many of the naked and hungry to clothe and feed. Exact and even handed justice should be our law and life, and yet, like Bassanio, he told the Knowles Rhetoric Society that it would be far better to do a little wrong on the side of the poor and the unfortunate, than with exact justice to act with the bloated capitalist. He did not attempt to harmonize the two positions for his hearers, however, but left that for them to work out. Dr. Lorimer has had a wonderful success as a preacher, and is very dramatic in the pulpit. He quoted a little from the Bible, and largely from Shakespeare; in Macbeth the elder Booth seemed again before his hearers. After some splendid periods, when denouncing wrong, he walked backward from the front to the rear of the platform with averted gaze, as if with Whittier in his Ichabod "to hide the shame." He has a wonderful command of language. The sermon was very interesting, and the lesson unmistakable. The singing by the celebrated quartet was very enjoyable.

The Baptist Church was filled to overflowing at ten o'clock Wednesday morning, to witness the graduating exercises of the class of the Newton Theological Institution. President Hovey presided, and, after prayer and music, addresses were made as follows: "Amos, the Unschooler Prophet," James Albert Brown; "An Article of a Standing or a Falling Church," Francis Howard Davis; "The Relation of the Ministry to the Labor Question," Richard Bartlett Esten; "Sympathy, the Great Element of Power in the Ministry of Paul," William Chipman Goucher; "The Preaching for Our Time," Edwin Palmer Hoyt; "Our Duty to Give the Gospel to Africa," Marion Rowland Perry. W. H. Wyman, R. O. Sherwood, C. S. Lemont, C. R. Bailey were excused from their addresses. The exercises closed with the presentation of diplomas by President Hovey, address to the class by Professor Burton, and music. NEWTON UPPER FALLS.

The 17th of June program is fast approaching completion, and will be perfected this week. A grand all-day fete will be the result, with a collation at mid-day.

Frank J. Wetherell has leased his residence, the old Wetherell homestead, on Elliot street, to a Mr. Ellis of Medfield, and has taken up his residence at Newtonville.

The musical selections at the strawberry festival of the Baptist church on Thursday evening were given by Mr. Wood and Miss Cousins of Grace Church choir, and Mr. I. F. Kingsbury, tenor.

The young ladies' sociable of last week was a most enjoyable gathering, and made up in pleasure what it lacked in number of attendants. Miss Fannie E. Billings was its able floor manager, while Miss Mabel Hurd and Miss Marion Dresser were the business managers.

Rev. J. Peterson was given a cordial reception in the vestry of the church. The Sunday-school superintendent, Mr. A. J. Grover, Rev. Z. A. Mudge, and the Baptist pastor, Rev. Thomas DeGruchy, made appropriate addresses. Singing, a collation and a good social time followed.

Mr. H. O. Billings left Boston on the "Cephalonia" for Europe, June 2, to be gone about two months. After some time in London, he will go to Paris, Vienna, Berlin, Brussels, Cologne and Dresden. He combines business with pleasure, and we trust he will have lots of both.

For sale, a base ball, which was to have been played for Decoration day morning, but, as the Highland club were more afraid of it than was the Hero of New Orleans of the cannon-balls of Fort Fisher, its present owners have no further use for it, and will sell cheap, regardless of cost. Apply to any of our base ball struck enthusiasts, of which there are many. Strike the first man you meet here, and you will be sure to hit one.

The young men of the Baptist church held a strawberry festival Thursday evening. Every portion and branch of the work involved, excepting the cooking, was done by the "lords of creation" and even the latter would have been done by them if they had not been afraid of likewise "cooking" the unfortunate victims who might have partaken of the fruits of their labors.

The Children's day concert by the Baptist Sunday school last Sunday evening was like all its predecessors, a grand affair, and most successful in every particular. The church was crowded to its utmost capacity, and a large number of extra seats were brought in, although even then all could not be given seats. The program arranged and so admirably carried out was printed and distributed, an appreciated new feature, which has come we hope to stay. The church was handsomely decorated under the management and artistic taste of Pastor DeGruchy, which had a pleasing effect, and added much to the evening's success. Superintendent F. W. Emerson officiated, with Miss Edith C. Newell, pianist. The program was as follows:

1. Praise Service, Assisted by Rand's Orchestra
2. Singing, "No Book is Like the Bible," School
3. Responsive Exercise, "The Mercy of God."
4. Prayer, School
5. Responsive Prayer, School

Mr. Alexander H. Randall, whose death occurred on the 4th inst., was born at Brighton March 11, 1807, and was 79 years and 3 months old. He was the tenth in a family of eleven children, all of whom he survives. His parents, Greenfield and Hannah Randall were from Shrewsbury. Early in life he served his time at the tanning business in the village of his birth, at which he worked several years, when he took up the house painting business, which he followed the rest of his life. Remaining in Brighton but a short time, he removed to Newton Centre, residing there until about 1843 or '44, when he purchased the old General Cheney place on Boylston street, this village, where he has since resided. Early in life he became connected with the fire service, in which he took much pride and interest, which he retained as long as life lasted. As a volunteer in the Brighton Fire Department he commenced a long and active service. Subsequently he became a member of the old-fashioned non-suction hand engine at Newton Centre. In the latter part of the "thirties," and in 1841 and 2, we find him foreman of this company, working actively for a new and improved engine, which, with the persistency that characterized his whole life, he succeeded in getting in 1842, when the "Eagle Six" was purchased, together with several other engines at the same time. With this he remained foreman for a year or more, during much of the time a resident of this village, yet seldom would there be a fire either night or day at which No. 6 was present, but what he was early on deck, frequently before those living much nearer to the Engine House. Several years ago, in conversation with the writer, an old fireman, who was a member of No. 6 during his foremanship, said of him, "Captain Randall was as good a fireman as ever stood on top of a tub." After removing here, he early enrolled himself as a member of the Mechanic Engine Co., No. 4, of which he was foreman for several years at different times, his last being just previous to the late war. He was also a member of the old board of firewards previous to 1843, when a board of engineers was substituted, of which he was also a member. Of those who were associated with him as members of Eagle Six, only one is now in active service, Newton's honored veteran, J. Q. A. Hawkes of Steamer 2, West Newton, who, since April 3, 1843, has served a continuous membership, and is to-day able and willing. As a fireman and officer, Captain Randall in his time had probably no superior. He was a great favorite with the fire laddies, being bold, dashing and born with the power to command, which made him their beau ideal, and, with his great admiration for the service and interest therein, his fame was not confined to the limits of Newton. Some five years ago he fell a victim to chronic rheumatism, from which for a long period he suffered greatly, until it passed away, leaving him a complete wreck, except mentally. He had no use of his limbs, and was bed-ridden for some three years, yet, during that period, with his mental powers in perfect condition, he bore it with a patience that is seldom seen. Not a word of complaint escaped his lips, apparently perfectly resigned to his fate, until nearly the last, when he grew somewhat childish, and believed that he would soon be able to get up. He passed away quietly, although not wholly unexpectedly, as for the past few weeks he has been fast declining from gangrene, which some time ago set in, and he died of hemorrhage at the last. His loss will be sorely felt by his many friends and neighbors, in whose memory his many past acts of friendship, aid and justice will ever remain fresh. When a young man he worked in the family of Dr. Holmes, father of Oliver Wendell Holmes, and has often trotted the now celebrated Doctor on his knee. The elder Holmes presented him with a Bible, which is now in possession of the family. The funeral services took place on Monday afternoon and was largely attended. He leaves two sons, both residing at the old homestead, but his wife died a few years ago.

WALTER THORP,
NEWTON CENTRE.

The simplest and best awning ever made. It need not be removed to close the blinds; can be put on or removed in one minute by any one from the inside. It presents no folds to catch the rain or dust, and therefore is very durable. The awning can be attached to the window any distance from the top, so as to give a passage of air over it. It can be opened at either side, or both, to give an increased circulation of air. In case of removal, can, at slight expense, be made to fit any window. No carpenter needed, spring or fall. It costs no more than any other style of awning, much less than most.

Highest medal awarded at the late New Orleans Exposition.

NEWTON.

—Umbrellas and trunks repaired at H.
Jordan's, Bacon street, Newton.

—Mr. George W. Morse and family of this city are at Cottage Park, Winthrop, for the summer.

—Mrs. John A. Kenrick is passing two weeks at Shirley Hill, N. H. She intends to pass the summer at the seashore, in company with her daughter Janie.

—Channing street is undergoing a long needed improvement. The curb is being reset, the gutters paved, and the road bed will also receive attention.

—Our Newton neighbor, the GRAPHIC, has improved so much lately that its friends scarcely recognize it. A new head and evidently vigorous man at the helm give it a decided air of business.—[Waltham Free Press.

—Mr. Henry E. Snow, of Boston, and Miss Louise E. Clark are to be married on Wednesday at Lawrence, the home of the bride. After a wedding trip, they will reside in this city, where they will be at home in August.

—In the report made by Grace church to the Diocesan convention, the number of communicants is stated at 230; in Sunday school 187; baptized during the year 20; confirmed 16. The total contributions were $11,518.75.

—The invitations are out for the public installation of the officers of Waban Lodge,
I. O. O. F., on Thursday evening, July 1st, at 8 o'clock. They are very handsomely gotten up on silver edged satin-lined paper, and the exercises are expected to be of great interest.

—E. P. Burnham has opened a branch cycle agency at Tarleton's jewelry store in Watertown. Mr. Tarleton will have charge of it, and the store will be known as the "Watertown Cycle Agency." A full line of new machines will be kept, also bicycles, tricycles and tandems to let.

—H. F. Crocker and E. P. Burnham climbed Lock's Hill, Palfrey street, Watertown, at 7.30 last Friday evening, on Mr.
Burnham's club tandem, in the presence of a dozen spectators. They made the remarkably good time of 2.27, and this is the first time a tandem has been ridden up the hill.

—The Christian Register has this statement. "In his able paper on 'Liturgical Service,' Rev. F. B. Hornbrooke truly says, 'The real union of a religious organization will be found, not so much in its creeds and catechisms, as in its prayers.'" An abstract of the paper will be found in another column.

—Mr. M. C. Bates of Newton, who has been commissioner for Rhode Island the past winter, at the exposition in New Orleans, has presented to the Newton Natural History Society a large collection of minerals, gold, silver, copper, lead and other ores from the Nevada, Arizona, and other celebrated mines in the rich mineral belt of that region.

—The supreme lodge, K. H., has issued several important circulars, the first of which gives the full list of officers and committees elected and appointed at the late annual session at Providence. Attention is called to the repeal of the suicide law. The subordinate lodges are urged to co-operate earnestly in the efforts for the perpetuity and success of the order, as nothing can be done by the supreme and grand lodges without their help.

—During the absence of Rev. Dr. Shinn, which will probably be from June 21st to Sept. 5th, there will be no interruption of the regular services at Grace church. The vestry will make arrangements for clergyman to officiate on Sundays, and in case of emergencies arising at other times, Rev.
W. G. Wells of St. Mary's, Lower Falls;
Rev. A. W. Eaton of St. Andrew's, Chestnut Hill, and Rev. E. A. Rand of Watertown have promised to respond to any calls made upon them. The Sunday school will be open all summer, and will be under charge of Mr. G. A. Flint. Letters to Dr.
Shinn during his absence can be sent care of Thos. Cooke & Son, Fleet st., London, England.

—The fair at the church of Our Lady has received several new attractions this week, among which is a magnificent sideboard, manufactured expressly for the fair, by Donovan & Flannigan Brothers of Boston.
Great amusement is caused by the contest over the elegant whip donated by Kimball Brothers of Boston, between W. T. Hill of Newtonville and H. W. Bessa of Newton, the voting being kept nearly even by the friends of the parties. Another whip is being contested for by John Flood of Newton and William Wier of Newton Centre, and each party has a large number of votes to his credit. The receipts of the week have been so large that it has been decided to keep the fair open for another week, to give plenty of time for voting. An interesting event is the award of the gold watch and chain to be given to the most popular lady.

—Mrs. S. A. D. Shepard left for Martha's Vineyard this week.

—Patrick Carr brought suit against L.
E. Green for assault upon his son, one of the youths arrested for stoning bicyclists. The case was tried before Judge Park, and he ruled that the action of Mr.

First Field Day

Saturday afternoon, June 19th, at Hammond's Pond, will be the first field day of the Newton Natural History Society. The society and all who wish to accompany the members will take the 2.25 p. m. train from Boston, and by the Circuit railroad go to Chestnut Hill station. A walk of half a mile up the railroad track, and there the party will enter a path and ramble through the wood to the Pond. The hill nearby will be ascended, the outcropping ledges examined, and wild flowers gathered. The locality is one of unusual interest, and it is hoped a large number will avail themselves of the pleasure of this afternoon's outing. The public are cordially invited to join the society.

The High School Association.

The attention of past members of the N. H. S. is again called to the fact that next Thursday, June 24, is the date of the first reunion of the N. H. S.
Association. It will be held in Armory Hall, Newton. In order that arrangements may be made complete it is necessary that all who intend to be present should procure tickets before Tuesday, June 22. These may be obtained of any one of the committee; and it is hoped that all who have been members of the school will be present on this occasion. The train which reaches Boston at 7.50
p. m., will stop at Auburndale, West Newton, Newtonville and Newton, to accommodate those who wish to attend the meeting.

Field Day to Rockport.

The Newton Natural History Society will have the second Field Day at Rockport, Cape Ann, Saturday, June 26. The party will leave Newton at 9.27 in the morning—leave the Eastern depot at 10.45, and arrive at Rockport at 12.20. Leave Rockport at 5 and arrive at Boston at 6.30.

The granite quarries, in some reports the largest and finest in New England, will be visited—walks to the little beaches and along the rocky shores.
Those who wish can walk or ride to Pigeons Cove, two miles away. To the botanist this town is a field of rare interest. In order to obtain the low rate—one dollar for the round trip—at least twenty-five tickets must be sold. The party are advised to carry lunch. Early application should be made to Dr. J. F. Frisbie, Prof. S. E. Warren, John E.
Alden or Jesse Fewkes.

Sometime.

BY SARAH M. B. PIATT.

"Well, either you or I,
After whatever is to say is said,
Must see the other die,
Or hear, through distance, of the other dead,
Sometime.

"And you or I must hide
Poor empty eyes, and faces wan and wet,
With life's great grief, beside
The other's coffin, sealed with silence, yet,
Sometime.

"And you or I must look Into the other's grave, or far or near,
And read as in a book,
Writ in the dust, words we made bitter here,
Sometime.

"For both must lose the way
Wherein we walk together, very soon;
One in the dusk shall stay,
The other first shall see the rising moon,
Sometime.

"Oh! fast, fast friend of mine,
Lift up the voice I love so much, and warn—
To wring faint hands and pine,
Tell me I may be left forlorn, forlorn,
Sometime.

"Say I may kiss with tear—
Forever falling and forever cold,
One ribbon from sweet years,
One dear, dead leaf, one precious ring of gold,
Sometime.

"Say you may think with pain
Of some slight grace, some timid wish to please,
Some eager look half vain
Into your heart, some broken sob like these,
Sometime.

AN AMERICAN BRIDE.

Why did Lord Verriner wander in strange and tropical climes, explore Japan and Timbuctoo, and attempt to cross the Himalayas? The noble earl only tried to get married once, and in the story of that wedding is contained the reason for his becoming such a distinguished traveller and growing such a very long beard.

Lord Verriner had been living a fast life ever since he came into his title and got hold of his property; and, at the time of which I am speaking, though the former necessarily remained intact, the latter was practically non-existent. He had borrowed from his bootmaker, his tailor, and his jewellers, after having previously exhausted the patience and generosity of the Jews. Gambling, racing, and dissipation had, in fact, ruined him. But still his title and position had a marketable value; for his was one of the oldest and most distinguished families of England. But this marketable value was now only of one kind. The Jews and the bootmakers would no longer listen to him, even though he was the handsomest man of his day, with the most perfect manners, and one of the pets of that small circle of society which sits up aloft like a party of cherubs, regarding scornfully the morals and manners of the respectable folks below. But in spite of the lost credit of Lord Verriner among the money-lenders, he was still a spoiled darling among women. And it occurred to him one day that there was his market. He must do the usual thing: marry money which wanted a title in exchange.

Thinking it over, he saw that most of his fellows had succeeded in getting out of a similar predicament by these means and had married American girls. This, he thought, would be a tolerably easy thing to do. English women, he believed, required more attention, and were less business-like and more sentimental in their matrimonial affairs. He decided to look out for an American. Verriner believed he understood women thoroughly. He was an excellent actor, and could cloak himself with a gentle and profoundly deferential manner, which was a great success among the women of his own social status. He preserved his intense languor always when in society, except in the smoking-room; for, as he well knew, it was safe. It prevented his ever getting into hot water. Underneath this quiet surface a volcano blazed, and a very unpleasant volcano too. Verriner had the most frightful temper, which he was accustomed to let loose upon his servants, his horses and dogs. The first left him; the last two showed their resentment in different ways. He was never safe from a bite in his own stables; and his dogs kept out of his sight.

This was the man who, a month or two after he had made up his mind to do it, had discovered a new American beauty, just over from the States for the London season, with dollars and greenbacks enough to re-instate any ruined lord. Verriner thought her really very tolerable, and was much amused by her independent and lively manner, which contrasted well with the profound languor he always maintained in her presence. His handsome face, his intense quiet and repose, and the position he could give her, all pleased Hetty Leigh. And so, when Verriner lazily but respectfully proposed, Hetty accepted him with open and undisguised delight. In fact, she clasped her hands as soon as the thing was done, and said, "Dear me! won't the girls at home stare!"

Mrs. Leigh nearly fainted—as nearly as a wily middle-aged American lady can—when she heard the good news. She had come over with one object: to marry her Hetty to a lord. And it was all arranged before the season was fairly begun. And Hetty's husband was such a handsome, quiet man; and Hetty's wedding would be the grandest event in the London season!

It was all settled, and everything went merrily. Hetty and her mother were asked to all the best houses; the girl who was to be Lady Verriner must be royally entertained by everybody, even though a few of the women would have been glad to throw vitriol in her pretty piquant face. How Hetty dressed! Her toilettes alone were enough to make an envious woman hate her, even if she had not the additional and unpardonable privilege of being rich enough to pay for Lord Verriner to be always carrying her cloak and fan, and keeping out of the way of her train.

Well, the time came for the wedding. It was at the very height of the season, and, as Mrs. Leigh had foreseen, it was to be one of its events. More than one great personage had promised to be present, including that very great personage who gives the tone to English society. The noble ones of the land were bidden to meet them. The wedding presents were a sight indeed, and the list of them in papers made the mouths of burglars water with longing. The trousseau was a wonder, too, and made sad the hearts of many great ladies.

Verriner was well content. If he had to be married at all, everything must be good form. And it promised to be so. He had taken the trouble to secure the presence of the great personages and the people whom they cared to meet. No other wedding of the season could hold a candle to his; he felt quite sure of that. He knew himself to be a superb creature, and he was pleased with Dame Fortune for showing her appreciation of the fact.

The morning came, and when Verriner rose he felt nervous for the first time in his life. There certainly is something very trying about a wedding morning, even to the most hardened. He ate no breakfast, but began at champagne before he dressed, and went on with it during the process. His best man, the young Marquis of Broadlands, came in to look after him. He found Verriner trembling; he had never done this on the morning of a duel, or after a night over the cards, or the moment before a race was run on which his all was staked.

"What's the matter, Verriner?" inquired the young marquis, in much amazement. "Suppose the prince shouldn't come!" "Oh, nonsense! he always keeps his word. Make haste, or we shall be late at the church."

Verriner drank another glass of champagne, and they started.

The church was already beginning to fill as a church only does fill on such occasions as this, with the cream of the upper ten thousand. Verriner was pleased, for in his heart this apparent cynic was as vain as a schoolgirl. Soon after he arrived, the prince came; and at last "every one" was there except the bride.

The wedding-dress did not come home till the very last minute; and then it was found that the white silk lace with which the lovely little flower-adorned bodice was fastened had been left out in the hurry. Hetty's maid went off in a hansom to the milliner's; and at last all was right, and the prettiest and brightest bride of the year was ready. And quite cool, too, though she was so late. For Hetty was a girl who never got fevered or flurried. She took life very easily, spite of her vivacity of manner. She resembled in some respects the little heroine of "The Mikado" who says, "We're very wide awake, the moon and I."

Certainly she was late, and it was very shocking, considering what an august throng awaited her; but it could not be helped, and she thought Verriner valued her sufficiently to bear the trial in patience.

But by the time the bride and her mother reached the church, Verriner had lost his head. He read the thing simply as an insult put on himself, and that before the only audience in the world he heard a straw for. He began to feel like a horse with the bit between his teeth, when sharp spurs were struck in by an ignorant rider. Broadlands, who knew his temper, looked at his face and wondered what he would do. They were waiting in ambush in the vestry. At last there was a faint murmur; the bride had arrived. Verriner hurried round and reached the church-door just in time to meet her as she stepped into the porch.

"How dare you put such an insult upon me?" he hissed into her ear—"you, the daughter of a dirty oil merchant! By God, I'll make you pay for this when we get away!"

Hetty looked straight into the face of this furious man, a face hideous with rage. No lady had ever seen such a look on his face before. But he thought this girl was absolutely in his power now. No one heard what he said but herself, and it was all over in an instant. Broadlands seized his arm and led him away; and the bride was taken possession of by a stately-looking American (like Hetty's father, he, too, had struck oil) who was to give her away.

Bride and bridegroom met again at the altar. Hetty looked quite cool, but her gray eyes were very pale; Verriner, by a tremendous histrionic effort, had recovered himself, and wore his usual soft languor. The ceremony went on, and everybody assumed the right expression. The bridegroom was asked whether he would take this woman, etc., "I will." When, however, the dignitary who officiated turned to Hetty, and asked her the same question, an awful thing happened. Quite coolly, without apparent emotion, she replied, "I will not."

Her high-pitched American voice penetrated right through the church, and everybody heard the appalling words. The whole assemblage stood still as if petrified for a moment, and then Mrs. Leigh broke the silence by rushing to her daughter, and seizing her arm.

"Are you mad?" she whispered. "No," answered Hetty, quietly, but in those fearfully audible high-pitched tones, "I'm sane. I am not going to marry a man who, the moment he thinks he is sure of me, talks to me as if I were a negro slave. He called my father a dirty oil merchant. No, thank you, sir," turning to Verriner, "give your title and the rest of it to some meeker girl than I am. To know all the best people does not make up for being bullied at home. Besides when I do marry, I mean to marry a gentleman."

Every word of this speech was heard by everybody. Having finished it, Hetty turned to Verriner, and then swept down the central aisle, followed by her discomfited bridesmaids, and her now weeping mother. People looked at her as she passed with mingled feelings; wonder, admiration, horror, awe.

"What a devil of a girl!" said Broadlands to himself. "I'd like to marry her, I declare!"

But his attention was distracted by Verriner who having cast an agonized glance around, saw that the people were hiding their faces in their prayer books and handkerchiefs, and that their shoulders shook. He fled through the vestry, Broadlands following him.

What a murmur of talking and laughing rose from that distinguished congregation as it left the church, and got into the long string of carriages which waited outside. There was no wedding breakfast; but there were the most delightful afternoon teas that day; for everybody who had been present had to relate the story to innumerable friends.

Verriner left town by the first train to Dover, and when he was next heard of had been living for some time in a very distant and very warm country. He was among savages, and his ferocity had earned him an enviable distinction in the most elevated circles.

As for Hetty, she braved her mother's tears and her friends' reproaches without dismay. She was quite convinced she had done the right thing. And so were her friends when, in the first snows of winter, they were bidden to a grand country wedding, which made this "devil of a girl" the Marchioness of Broadlands.—[Adapted from The London World.

Recent Exploration and Scientific Investigation.

The director of the Geological Survey of Ireland, Professor Hull, F. R. S., delivered the Annual Address of the Victoria (Philosophical) Institute in London, on the 28th of May, on which occasion the Institute's new President, Professor Stokes, President of the Royal Society, took the chair. The report was read by Captain F. Petrie, the honorary secretary, and showed that the Institute's home, colonial, and American members were upwards of eleven hundred, including many who joined from a desire to avail themselves of the Institute's privileges rather than bear a part in its work.

An increasing number of leading scientific men now contributed papers and aided in the work of bringing about a truer appreciation of the result of scientific inquiry, especially in cases where scientific discovery was alleged by the opponents of religious beliefs to be subversive thereof. The author of the Address then gave an account of the work, discoveries, and general results of the recent Geological and Geographical Expedition to Egypt, Arabia, and Western Palestine, of which he had charge. Sketching the course taken by him (which to a considerable extent took the route ascribed to the Israelites), he gave an account of the physical features of the country, evidences of old sea margins 200 feet above the present sea margins, and showed that at one time an arm of the Mediterranean had occupied the valley of the Nile as far as the First Cataract, at which time Africa was an island (an opinion also arrived at by another of the Institute's members, Sir W. Dawson), and that, at the time of the Exodus, the Red Sea ran up into the Bitter Lakes, and must have formed a barrier to the traveller's progress at that period. He then alluded to the great changes of elevation in the land eastward of these lakes, mentioning that the waters of the Jordan valley once stood 1,292 feet above their present height, and that the waters of the Dead Sea, which he found 1,050 feet deep, were once on a level with the present Mediterranean sea margin, or 1,292 feet above their present height. The great physical changes which had taken place in geological time were evidenced by the fact that whilst the rocks in Western Palestine were generally limestone, those of the mountains of Sinai were amongst the most ancient in the world. The various geological and geographical features of the country were so described as to make the address a condensed report of all that is now known of them in Egypt, Palestine, and Arabia Petraea. Sir Henry Barkly, G. C. M. G., F. R. S., moved a vote of thanks to Professor Hull and to those who had contributed to the work of the Institute during the year, which includes Assyriological investigations by Professor Sayce, Mr. Boscawen, and others; M. Maspero's and Capt. Conder's Egyptian papers; Professor Porter's Eastern researches; also a review of the question of Evolution by Professor Virehow, and the results of investigations in regard to the subject of the origin of man, as to which it had been shown by Sir William Dawson, that geology divided the chronology of animal life into four "great periods"; in the first,—or Eozoic,—in the Geological as in the Bible records, were found the great reptiles; and the last, or Tertiary, was again subdivided into five periods; and it was only in the last of these, the "modern" period, that the evidences of man's presence had been found. Again, as regards his ape descent, the formation and proportions of the skull and bones of the ape considered most like man were found to be so different from those of man as to place insuperable difficulties in the way of the theory. In the gorilla, the high crest on the skull, which was also found in the hyena, was absent in man. Also, among other points of the capacity of the brain of the anthropoid ape were taken at ten, that of man even in his savage state was twenty-six, or nearly thrice as much, a very important fact when, as was known, any appreciable diminution in the brain of man was at once accompanied by idiocy. As regards the transmutability of species, Barrande's arguments against the theory, founded on the results of a life of research among the fossil strata, had not yet been overturned; and modern research clearly pointed to the fact one great bar to the transmutability of species lay in the refined and minute differences in the molecular arrangements in their organs.

The proceedings were concluded by a vote of thanks to Professor Stokes, under whose presidency it was remarked that the work of the Institute would be carried out with the increased help and guidance of men of the highest scientific attainments, and in a manner to tend to advance Truth. A conversation was then held in the Museum.

Now.
 Love me now! Love has such a little minute,
 Day crowds on day with swift and noiseless tread,
 Life's end comes ere fairly we begin it,
 Pain jostles joy, and hope gives place to dread.
 Love me now!
 It will be too late when we are dead!

Love me now! While we still are young together,
 While glad and brave the sun shines overhead,
 Hand locked in hand, in blue and smiling weather,
 Sighing were e'en, and variance ill bested,
 Love me now!
 It will be too late when you are dead!

Love me now! Shadows hover in the distance;
 Cold winds are coming; green leaves must turn red,
 Frownest thou, my Love, at this sad instance?
 Even this moment may the dart be sped!
 Love me now!
 It will be too late when I am dead!

LASELL SEMINARY.

SERMON BY REV. CHARLES W. CUSHING,
D. D., ON THE LIFE AND INFLUENCE OF CHRIST.

After services conducted by Rev. M. J. Cramer, formerly United States Minister to Switzerland, in the Congregational church, Auburndale, Sunday morning, the baccalaureate sermon was delivered before the ten graduates of Lasell Seminary for young women and a large congregation, by Rev. Chas. W. Cushing, D. D., formerly principal of Lasell, and now of Lockport, N. Y. His theme was the harmony between the coming and work of the Messiah, as prophesied by Isaiah, and the teachings and influence of Christ, as borne out by the New Testament, and the progress of Christianity, the texts being Isaiah IX., 6:7 and St. John XIX., 30.

He said: These two passages have been considered in discord by some who argued that if Christ's words were true and he died on the cross, then the words of the prophet could not be true. The words of Isaiah announced the most remarkable event; and those of Christ the most wonderful tragedy—not the most dreadful or cruel tragedy, but the most unjustifiable. Christ taught obedience to Caesar; he was in harmony with the Jewish church, kept the full spirit of the Jewish Sabbath, and feasts, being at the great feast of the Passover when seized; he was in no sense a revolutionist; he found the most diabolical system of slavery that ever existed, for, of the 120,000,000 people of the Roman empire at that time, 60,000,000 were slaves, liable to death at the pleasure of their masters, yet Christ uttered no word against slavery; there was no wrong connected with the institutions of government that he uttered a word against, except regarding marriage customs. He was a plain reformer, requesting nobody to believe what he taught, but to judge by his works; a more modest, unassuming, self-sacrificing philanthropist was never seen in the world. He was tried and acquitted by Herod and Pilate; yet was crucified at a time when Jerusalem was thronged at the feast of the Passover, and on the cross he uttered the words, "It is finished." There are those who claim that this was the end of the prophecy.

In spite of the statements to the contrary, statistics show the steady spread of Christianity. In the past 80 years the English speaking population has increased 270 per cent. while the per cent. of the Protestant increase, has been 320, of the Roman Catholic 143, and of those of no religion 100. In 1800 there was one church member to every 14-2 of the population; in 1850, one to 6-7-100, and in 1880, one to 15-100; so the Christian population, by open profession of faith, has increased 280 per cent. in that period. The increase of Christian thought is seen in the literature, a large proportion of the best and most popular books being by Christian authors, while an anti-Christian book is rare and calls forth scathing reviews, even from the secular press. In educational institutions the same growth is seen. In 1880 there were 356 colleges, of which 300 were Christian in their influences. In 1830, 30 per cent. of the male students were in unchristian colleges, while in 1880 there were only 17 per cent. in such. All the Seminars and colleges for women are Christian, I think. A large proportion of the presidents and professors of colleges and the leading scientists are believers in Christ. The method of thought is on the line of Christianity, and the moral and mental sciences are in harmony therewith.

I know it is said the liberal churches are growing over the evangelical, but facts do not show it. In 1800 there were 18 evangelical churches within a radius of 20 miles, taking Boston for a centre, and 23 non-evangelical; in 1880 there were 257 of the former, and 81 of the latter in the same section. The evangelical churches had multiplied 14-2 times, while the other had multiplied three times in this starting point of liberal Christianity, as it is considered, especially in the West. The membership of the evangelical churches has increased 8,000,000 during the past 42 years, and that of the non-evangelical churches is 64 less than it was 42 years ago, showing a wonderful increase in the number of believers in Christ and the vicarious atonement. By this it will be seen that liberal Christianity is not taking such deep root as we have been led to believe.

The speaker showed how the Christian idea has diffused itself through art and in other ways, and argued that the growth of Christian influence bore out the prophecy of Isaiah concerning the wonderful Messiah, and that the prophecy and Christ's words were in harmony.

The Pine Farm School.

The annual meeting of the Boston Children's Aid Society was held Friday afternoon at Pine Farm, West Newton, Mr. C. W. Scudder presiding. The treasurer reported that $406 had been expended for board and care of girls the past year, leaving a balance on hand of the girls' fund of $27.43. The statement of the boys' fund was as follows: Income from invested funds, $2100; subscriptions, $1647; donations, $1444; profits of printing press, $93; received for boys' labor, $28; received for board from parents and guardians, $186; farm produce sold, $741; legacy from Mrs. Stone, $250; legacy from Mrs. Fennel Tudor, $500; collected on mortgage, $100; total, $7,127.50; expenditure, $7,125.00. The superintendent, C. E. Washburn, who retires from that position, after 17 years' service, reported that the income from the farm the past year had largely increased, and the farm never looked better. The report of the executive, which was presented by C. W. Hubbard, referred to the long and faithful service rendered by the retiring superintendent. After a careful search of a competent person to fill that position, the committee had secured Mr. and Mrs. B. J. Moore, manager and matron of the state primary school at Monson. The following officers were elected: Vice-presidents, Rev. James Freeman Clarke and Robert Treat Paine; treasurer, Edward Jackson; auditor, C. E. Billings; clerk, H. D. Chapin. The board of directors was re-elected, with the addition of Miss Blanche Shimmie. The election of a president to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of the late Rufus Ellis, was postponed until the October meeting.

The Newton Hospital.

[Zion's Herald.]

We mention a local incident of Newton city as suggesting valuable hints for other young municipalities and large towns. A model Cottage Hospital was opened there last Saturday with appropriate exercises. The movement has been a voluntary one among the ladies and gentlemen of the city, and has been gradually developed, through the last few years. It has been consummated at a comparatively small outlay, but combines in its construction the results of the latest and best experiences in such institutions. It is situated so as not to be an occasion of anxiety to its neighbors, with land enough (about ten acres) for any required enlargement, near to a railroad station of the circuit road, on a high gravelly site. The physicians of the city, of both leading schools, are in harmony as to its management. It has a ward for men, women and children, with provisions in its plan for an extension of its opportunities as required. The ladies in all parts of the city have taken hold of its management, its appointments and its support, with great zeal, much to their own enjoyment and profit. The churches will all have a hospital Sunday to take up collections for its current expenses. The whole outlay for land and building thus far has only been about twelve or thirteen thousand dollars. A matron and nurse are now in charge of it. The dedicatory exercises filled the halls with the best people of the city, and were very interesting. It will be well, if such a Christian charity is proposed in any of our New England towns, to become acquainted with this cheap, efficient and admirably arranged building and system in Newton.

Bric-a-brac.

The North American Review is a very good monthly newspaper now as far as the editorial end is concerned, but its telegraphic pages are weak. Now that the season of thunder-storms is at hand a few rules for the benefit of timid females may be in order. By a strict observation of the following, no danger from thunder need be apprehended: Don't sit close to the wall. Don't sit in the centre of the room. Don't sit near a window or a door. Don't sit in a line between two windows. Sit in the centre of a feather bed. Don't have any steel articles about, as steel attracts lightning. A common key-ring carried in the pocket is a sure protection from harm. By no means go near feathers—even a feather duster has been known to attract lightning.—[Palmer Journal.]

Clara—"Do you remember Jane Criddle, who went to school with us?" Dora—"The girl with the cat's eyes and pug-nose?" "Yes." "Big mouth?" "Yes." "No chin, no forehead, red hair and complexion like a half-baked brick?" "The same."

A Western man owns a dog that climbs trees. This style of dog will not be welcomed by the young man who is in the courting business and whose girl's father keeps a tree-climbing brute. There are times when he saves his coat-tails and escapes other injuries by quickly shinning up a tree, but if the animal possesses the same talent, the young man's lot is an unhappy one, indeed.—[Norristown Herald.]

"Hello! There goes old Pennyray. Do you know whether he gets drunk now that he has got a new wife?" "Well, yes, you see he used to get full every night. But she soon put a stop to that by going down evenings and walking home from the office with him. It went that way for a little while until his nibs struck an idea and stole a march on the old lady." "That so. How is that?" "The old man now gets drunk at noontime."—[Lowell Citizen.]

"Well, poor Jones died last night." "Is it possible? I didn't hear he was sick. What was the complaint?" "Oh, he died from the effects of a cut." "How sad. Was it a large cut?" "No, it was a small cut, but of a very fatal nature." "Indeed? Pray tell me about it." "It was a small wood-cut of himself, which was published in one of the daily papers. When he saw it he fell over at once and died in great agony."—[Lynn Saturday Union.]

Edgerly—"Gracious, major! What is the matter? You seem agitated enough to eat a man." Major Coverlid—"Agitated! Why, of course I'm agitated. Who wouldn't be? Brown insults me and then refuses to fight. Zounds!" Edgerly—"Why, he's a poltroon!" Major Coverlid—"That's what I called him not ten minutes ago. Do you know I told him he was one of the worst pontons in the whole country."—[The Judge.]

STATE POLITICS.

Although it is too early in the season to predict with any degree of certainty who will be the standard bearer of the Republican party in the State, this fall, still there is quite a quantity of straws floating about in the political atmosphere, which show in which direction the wind is beginning to blow. There are many, undoubtedly, who would prefer our present excellent chief magistrate to any other candidate, and who still hope that he will consent to stand for re-election. However, his determination to withdraw, at least for the present, from public life, would seem to exclude him from any list of possible candidates which might be named.

If two years ago the inquiry had been made as to who would be the most likely to succeed Gov. Robinson, the answer in most instances would undoubtedly have been, the Hon. W. W. Crapo. Mr. Crapo has many warm friends throughout the State, and there can be no question as to his ability to govern the State well, and in a way to reflect credit both upon himself and upon the Commonwealth. At the present time, however, his candidacy does not seem to be received with that enthusiasm, or pushed with that vigor which assure success. All this, however, may be changed between now and fall.

Of all the candidates thus far mentioned, the one most likely to be selected is Lieutenant Governor Ames. The excellent manner in which he has performed the duties of the office which he now holds has shown him to be well fitted to go up higher. His friends claim that he has earned his promotion by his service in the humble position, and that the spirit if not the rules of civil service reform require his nomination. If labor questions are to enter into the fall campaign, the nomination of Mr. Ames would in all probability be as strong as any the Republican party could make.

Who shall be nominated for the second place upon the ticket is a question that is generally left open until it is pretty well fixed who shall have the first place. As it looks to-day it will probably go to the western part of the State. It is rumored that Attorney General Sherman will not stand for re-election. If this is so, the Republican party could not do better than nominate for the position Hon. A. E. Pillsbury, President of the Senate. If he be selected to succeed Mr. Sherman, the State will be assured of a most able and efficient officer.

AN IDEAL NEWSPAPER.

Rev. Mr. Perin gave a talk in Boston the other day upon "The ideal newspaper," in which he described what it should be. A number of newspapers have already claimed that he had them in mind, or we should have said he was thinking of the GRAPHIC under its new management, when he said: "The ideal newspaper will be independent. It will exist for the news; but as the historian stands close enough to past events to state their relations and tendencies, so the newspaper, standing very near to present events, may do the same thing. But the value of the editorial department will depend upon its independence. It will be independent of all party managers, cliques, sects and quacks, if it would really serve the public. But this is not equivalent to saying it will not have ideas. On the contrary, it will be full of ideas, and freely express them. The ideal newspaper will not be a mere trimmer, bidding for the largest circulation, but it will be aggressive, bold and consistent. It will be moral in its tone, though still a commercial enterprise."

Any newspaper which is conducted on the principles set forth above is bound to win a place for itself, and to enjoy the confidence and respect of the public. No newspaper that allows itself to be the organ of a clique or faction, and to have no opinions, save such as are pleasing to the faction, can ever hope to have much influence in a community. The same thing may also be said of a paper that is afraid to express an opinion on any matter for fear of losing a subscriber. Rev. Mr. Perin's remarks might be read with profit in a good many newspaper offices.

"The Bread Winners," which has been credited to so many authors, is now said to have been written jointly by Capt. Frank H. Mason, formerly of the Cleveland Leader and now consul to Marseilles, and his wife. The Cleveland Sun is authority for the statement, and also says that it was written during their first year abroad and brought to this country by Col. John Hay, who found for it a publisher. The Sun adds that if any one doubts this statement, let them ask Col. Hay. We fear that Col. Hay and Capt. Mason will both have to make affidavits before this statement will be believed; the secret of the authorship of the book has been disclosed so many times that people have become sceptical.

The members of the Common Council put themselves on record against increasing the city's debt, and voting money which will have to come out of next year's taxes, but nevertheless they passed the appropriation for the Auburndale Tunnel. As Councilman Chadwick said, the tunnel was as much of a necessity, and would accommodate as many people, as the widening of Waverley Avenue. The one had been voted without opposition and the only objection to the other was that it voted away money that was not in the treasury. All were agreed as to the necessity for a tunnel at Auburndale, and it is fortunate for the interests of the city that it is to be built at once. As the work would have to be done some time, the sooner it is done the better. However, it is to be hoped that no more improvements will be voted for this year, to be paid for out of next year's taxes, and that when the appropriations for next year are made up, allowance will be made for this $14,000. The taxes should not increase out of all proportion to the city's valuation.

The Auditor's statement for May is given in another column, and is worth study by all interested in the city's affairs. It should be remembered, however, that several large appropriations have been made this month, which are not down in the statement.

EDWIN P. WHIPPLE, the distinguished literary critic, died at his home in Boston Wednesday evening, aged 67 years. He was the friend of Hawthorne, Sumner and Longfellow, and his critical essays are delightful reading.

It is gratifying to record that both the Newton Representatives voted to sustain Gov. Robinson and against the impudent claims of Cyrus W. Field.

The High School.

The High School teachers have this week distributed to the pupils for the guidance of parents, a schedule of studies, as arranged for the next school year. A blank is included, which asks the question: "Do you propose to attend the High School next year? If so, please indicate which course of study you intend to pursue, and which elective studies you wish to take." There are four courses of study—the General Course, which covers a period of four years, and includes the usual literary and scientific studies of a High School; the Institute Course, prepares for the Institute of Technology, four years; the Classical Course for college, four years; and the Mercantile Course for business, three years.

This excellent school, with its experienced and well trained teachers, entered upon the future with a membership larger than many colleges, and our citizens who are frequently adding to the endowments of colleges from shore to shore, should make their names memorable at home, by adding a hall, or a library, or a laboratory or at least a better breathing place, for the future citizens of Newton.

A Dedication Hymn.

Rev. S. F. Smith of this city, the author of "America," which has sung its way into the hearts of generations as a national hymn, attended the dedication of the Boys Home at Dedham on Friday of last week, and read a dedication hymn, composed, as he expressed it, for the "Rural Home of the Boston Children's Friend Society." He read it with a deep expression of feeling, and it was then sung by all present to the music of "More Love, O Christ, to Thee."

The following are the words:

Sacred, O God to Thee,
This home of ours;
Its sunny slopes and fields,
Its peaceful bowers;
Sacred, O God, to Thee—
Thine may it ever be—Both Thine and ours.
Here may the children learn
To love Thy praise;
Here infant hearts grow strong
In wisdom's ways;
All that is evil spurn,
For all true goodness yearns—
All to Thy praise.
And let Thy favor rest
On those whose love
Opened this rural home—
Garden and grove.
As all the good are blest,
Thy blessing on them rest,
Heaven and love.
After the weeping May Springs a bright June;
After a brief eclipse Shines the full moon;
After earth's twilight ray
Be ours a peaceful day—
Heaven's glorious noon.

The White Mountains.

A third Field Day—or rather eight days—to the White Mountains has been arranged by the Newton Natural History Society. This excursion is contingent upon a company of twenty-five. If this number is secured the party will leave Boston by the Boston & Maine Railroad about July 16th—cross Lake Winnepiscogee and spend one day at the Senter House, Center Harbor, then by boat to Wolfboro and by rail to North Conway and up the grand and ever beautiful Crawford Notch to the Mt. Pleasant House, near Fabyans. Three or four days will be spent here. Then the party will return through the Notch to North Conway and make a stay of two days at the Kearsage House. From North Conway the return will be by the Eastern Railroad to Boston. Round trip tickets $28. A side trip excursion to the summit of Mt. Washington and one day on the summit can be made for $7 extra. It will be necessary for application to be made and tickets secured by the 10th of July in order to make final arrangements. All applications to be made to Dr. J. F. Frisbie. The public are invited to join this excursion.

The Newton Post Office.

Post Office Inspector Henry Chase made an unexpected visit to the Newton Post Office the past week, and examined the books, and the office generally. He found the books and postal work in first class condition, as Postmaster Latta has been noted for his thoroughness and ability, but he found a good deal of fault with the accommodations of the office and hinted that the administration intends to be very liberal. He said that the accommodations were not suitable for a second class office, and in fact were inferior to those of most third class offices. He directed the postmaster to at once secure better quarters, unless the whole width of the present store could be had to the depth of forty feet. He said that the rent paid was too high for a place of the size of Newton, but if he had inquired about the rents of stores in the vicinity, he would have seen that all rents are high in this city. He intimated, however, that the post office department would be willing to pay an increased rent for better accommodations, and said that for some second class offices the government paid as high as $1200 a year rent, though he did not promise more than half of that here. Newton certainly needs better post office accommodations, and the government can secure them by paying a sufficiently high price. If it does not do this, it will have to put up with what it can get. It is out of the question to remove the post office to some other location, unless a building is put up expressly for it, as there are no vacant stores in this part of Newton. There is some talk of putting up a two-story building on the other side of Centre street, on the vacant lot below Brackett's block, and the owner of the land is said to have offered to have the building ready for occupancy October 1st, if the government will take a four years' lease. Inspector Chase said he should recommend the removal of the office, unless better accommodations could be had in its present location. Plans are being drawn for the enlargement of the present quarters to nearly twice their present size, and a re-arrangement of the interior of the building. It is also planned to have wider outside doors, so as to avoid the blockades which now occur morning and evening. When the post office was moved to its present location, 500 boxes were sufficient for the wants of its patrons. Now there are more than double that number, every box is taken, and several hundred more are needed. This shows the rapid growth of Newton, and the government certainly can well afford to provide better accommodations here. Nothing definite has been determined upon as yet, but it is believed that arrangements will be made to retain the office in its present location, which accommodates more people than any other location would.

Death of Rev. C. McGrath.

Rev. Christopher McGrath, pastor of the St. Bernard church, died Sunday afternoon at the parochial residence in West Newton, after a long illness of consumption. Deceased was 41 years of age, and was born in Tralee, county Kerry, Ireland. He received his preliminary education for the priesthood at the Mount Millery monastery in Waterford. In 1869 he came to this country and entered Troy Seminary, where he was ordained in 1872. The same year he was appointed assistant at St. Peter and Paul's church, South Boston, and remained there until 1881, when he was appointed pastor of St. Bernard church. Deceased has been ill for several years, and for some time past has been unable to attend to his pastoral duties. Sunday afternoon he was attacked with a severe hemorrhage, and died in a short time. Father McGrath had a very cheerful disposition, and during his pastorate here, had endeared himself to his parishioners.

The funeral occurred Wednesday morning. The body lay in state in the church, which was heavily draped in mourning. For hours before the services the church was visited by parishioners, desirous to take a last look at the face of their beloved pastor. At the services the church was filled to overflowing. The music was by St. Mary's requiem quartet of Waltham, consisting of William P. Guinan, tenor; C. Leary, bass; Mrs. W. F. Kenney, contralto; Mrs. Agatha Reade, soprano, assisted by the regular choir of St. Bernard's Church.

Solemn high requiem mass, with the Gregorian chant, constituted the service. The celebrant was Rev. Father Blenkinsop of St. Peter and Paul's Church, South Boston; deacon, Father Masterson of Peabody; sub-deacon, Father Stack of Watertown; master of ceremonies, Father M. Lee of St. Peter and Paul's; eulogy by Father Johnson at Dedham; final absolution by His Grace Archbishop Williams. A floral cross and crown, with the word "Chaplain," came from St. Bernard's Court of Foresters; a cross and anchor from the Grattan Literary Society, with the words, "Our pastor" on the cross; a pillow from relatives and a harp from the church choir. The St. Bernard Court of Foresters attended in a body. The services were deeply impressive. Among the priests present were: Rev. Fathers Stack of Watertown, Welch of Natick, Collins and Gallagher of South Framingham, Gibbons and Murphy of Natick, Murphy of Weymouth, Johnson and Doody of Dedham, Lee of South Boston, Mahoney and Riley of Waltham, Clark of East Boston, Masterson of Peabody, Gilday of Lowell, O'Brien and Gleason of Newton Lower Falls, O'Callahan of South Boston, O'Toole of the Cathedral Duanean of Chelsea, McGrath of Somerville, Rossi and Nolan of Brighton, Murphy of Holliston, Tobin of Salem, McMahon of Charlestown, Boylan of Medway, Dolan of Newton, Lowney of Weymouth, McManus of Lawrence and Morris of Brookline.

The burial was in the Watertown cemetery, and the funeral procession was one of the largest ever seen in Newton.

LASELL'S COMMENCEMENT.

CLASS DAY EXERCISES OF THE CLASS OF '86
AT AUBURNDALE.

The little chapel connected with Lasell Seminary at Auburndale was crowded to its fullest capacity Monday evening, with scholars and their friends and relatives, as 10 happy looking maidens demurely stepped on the platform and commenced the exercises with which they sever their connection with what has been their home for three years. The cold, cloudy weather necessarily caused a suspension of the outdoor illuminations. The opening event was the singing of a medley by the graduating young ladies, and this was followed by a presentation of the class by Miss Ford. Miss E. R. Lamson, teacher of composition, read an original essay, and Miss Stafford played one of Beethoven's sonatas as a piano solo. The class history, read by Miss Mena Williams, was very interesting and witty. The "Class Prophecy," by Miss Buff, and the "Prophecy on the Prophetess by Miss Coats, provoked much laughter. Miss Penfield sang "If thou didn't love me" very prettily, and was encored, and the whole class joined in singing the class ode, which was composed by Miss Penfield, and is as follows:

We gather in this chapel dear,
So filled with memories bright,
And crowding comes each bygone year,
So soon to pass from sight.
The lingering gleam of parting day Seems loth to say "good-by";
The wind sweeps gently through the trees,
And answers sigh for sigh.
Now soon these halls we'll see no more;
E'en friend from friend must part;
But though in distant lands we roam,
Lasell still holds the heart.
Then out we'll go, and en avant Shall e'er our motto be;
With faith in th' unseen hand which guides
Our bark 'cross life's rough sea.

The indoor exercises closed with the distribution of class presents by Miss Allen. This event caused much amusement, each young lady receiving a present which represented some particular weakness of hers. For instance, one received a spoon, the reason is obvious; another a base ball bat, to assist in athletic sports; another a bottle of liquid food, for her loss of appetite, and so on. The lawn exercises finished the events of the evening, and consisted of the planting of the class tree, a chestnut, with an oration by Miss Rose, and the burning of the books, Miss Davenport delivering the elegy.

THE PRINCIPAL'S RECEPTION.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles C. Bragdon tendered the usual graduating class reception to the class of '86, Tuesday evening. Elaborate preparations had been made, and the grounds about the building were finely illuminated with Japanese lanterns, etc. Young ladies from the junior and sophomore classes acted as ushers and table waiters, while the seniors assisted Mr. and Mrs. Bragdon in receiving. The reception was from 8 till 11, and over 150 couples were in attendance, among them being Judge and Mrs. Park of Newton, Rev. and Mrs. J. W. Hamilton of Somerville, Rev. and Mrs. A. B. Kendig, Hon. J. W. Dickinson and daughter, Rev. R. H. Holway, Dr. and Mrs. F. Porter of Auburndale, Mr. N. T. Allen of Newton, Prof. Thos. B. Lindsay of Newton, Dr. Howard P. Bellows of Auburndale, Prof. W. O. Rolfe of Cambridgeport, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Hemenway of Newton, Mr. and Mrs. James Bird of Auburndale, Dr. Robert Wilson of Texas, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Penfield of Willsborough, Pa., Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Davenport of Erie, Pa., Mr. and Mrs. R. P. Allen, and Mr. George Bubb of Williamsport, Pa., Hon. J. J. Williams, state registrar, Des Moines, Ia., Mr. E. P. Call of Newtonville, Mrs. Mary Grant Cramer and Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Gould of Newton. This reception closed the festivities of the graduating class of '86.

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES.

The thirty-first annual commencement exercises at Lasell Seminary took place Wednesday morning at the Methodist Church in Auburndale. The chancel was beautifully decorated with flowering plants. On the platform were the alumnae and trustees of the seminary, together with Rev. Mr. Dickinson, former principal of the Wakefield Normal School, Rev. Dr. McKee and other divines.

The exercises began with the overture to "Stradella" as an organ voluntary by Mrs. Charles E. Parker of the class of '57. After prayer had been offered Rev. John H. Vincent, D. D., was introduced and made an earnest address. He drew a lesson from the past life of the school, and entertained the class about to leave the institution to model their lives after that of the great teacher. You may not be able, he said, to write a poem, but you may live one. Our souls should partake of all the noble qualities of the earnest men who have ever lived. Jesus, the greatest teacher of all, came to give the world a deeper, vaster outlook than belongs to the world of sense, one that shall remain forever, unmoved by the fluctuations of material things. The world is waiting to see the zeal and patience and tenderness of Christ incarnated in the lives of his followers. A fragment of an arch suggests the perfect whole—your lives. May you be the segment, which shall picture to those about you a perfect life. Life is eloquent with deeds. The curriculum of schools needs to have inserted true life, true being, as the main object of education. If I were to teach men, I would let loose upon them a noble life. A person full of reality is invincible and irresistible. In conclusion he said: "Young ladies, your lives may perhaps be passed among uncongenial surroundings, among people who are in every way your inferiors. If this comes, remember that it is something to be fit for the King's palace, although you must toil in the King's galley. Divers fields of usefulness are before you. But always keep in mind the importance of life. Walk among the royal ones, and let your controlling thought be "I live, and yet not I, but Christ who liveth in me." At the conclusion of the address, a quartette under the direction of Mr. J. Walter Davis sang Barnaby's "Wife's Song." Miss Moseetta Isabel Stafford, who had been chosen by her classmates for the purpose, then stepped forward and in a simple and unaffected manner gave the "Goodbye" to the class. Loving reference was made to the fatherly care of Professor Bragdon, and regret expressed relative to the coming separation. Miss Stafford was followed by a chorus of girls with Schumann's "Gypsy Song," after which Professor Bragdon made a short address, and awarded diplomas to the following young ladies: Rachel Porter Allen, Williamsport, Penn.; Nellie Tree Bubb, Williamsport, Penn.; Mary Eliza Coe, Durham, N. H.; Maggie Coats, Weatherford, Tex.; Helen Louise Davenport, Erie, Penn.; Blanche Theodora Ford, Concord, N. H.; Gertrude Ferguson Penfield, Willoughby, O.; Marietta Rose, Natick, Mass.; Moseetta Isabel Stafford, Decatur, Ill.; Cornelia Maria Williams, Des Moines, Ia.

Prof. Bragdon awarded two prizes for the best bread made during the year; the first to Miss Ada L. Dunnaway of Carbondale, Ill., and second to Miss Ida Mack of Helena, Mont. They consisted of tiny representations of a loaf of bread, the first prize being of gold and the second of silver.

The alumnae held their annual business meeting in the chapel at 2.15 o'clock. There was a good attendance, and after favorable reports had been submitted and received, the following officers were chosen for the ensuing year: President, Mrs. S. G. Coffin; Vice President, Mrs. C. J. Kellogg; Secretary, Miss Nellie Buell Ferguson, class of '81; Treasurer, Miss M. B. Luther; Executive Committee, Miss Louise L. Huray, Annie Bragdon Winslow and Miss M. B. Luther.

At the annual meeting of the Trustees of the seminary the annual reports showed the institution to be in a flourishing condition.

ALUMNAE ASSOCIATION REUNION.

The Lasell Alumnae Association met Wednesday afternoon at 3.30, at the Seminary. There was a large attendance present, representing many cities. The exercises consisted of an essay by Ada Langworthy Collier, '61; recitation by Grace I. C. Perley, '70; poem by Emily F. Woodard Potter, '59; song, Lizzie May Whipple, '85; and a memorial of Mr. Josiah Lasell, read by Isabel G. Jennings Parker, '57. The following reunion hymn, written by Martha Baldwin Lucas, '60, was sung:

Once again we meet together,
Come in concord and in peace;
Friendship smiles upon the greetings,
Welcome joys which never cease.
And to day fond memory's bringing Glimpses of the days gone by,
When our hopes were of the future,
And our dreams to verify.

And so while our life work doing,
Striving every to do right;
And to hold aloft our banner,
That forever it be bright.
We'll work on till God shall call us
From these earthly scenes away,
To our brighter home in Heaven
There to dwell in endless day.

After the exercises came the alumnae supper, and it was a very enjoyable affair.

—Mr. E. S. Colton's news room, has been so enlarged and improved, that it is hardly recognizable. He keeps all the daily and weekly papers including the GRAPHIC, besides a fine assortment of smoker's goods, stationery, athletic goods, and a great variety of other articles.

—The storm interfered with the successful observance of Floral Sunday at the Methodist church. The decorations were very tasty and prettily arranged, a large anchor and cross being among the most prominent. The music had been selected especially for this service, but the baptism of the children was necessarily postponed and will probably be held on Sunday morning, July 4th, during the communion service. In the evening a concert was given by the children of the Sunday school.

—The remains of Mrs. James J. Walworth were brought here Thursday for interment in the Newton cemetery, and funeral services were held at the chapel at 2.15 p. m. Mrs. Walworth died at the Hotel Alexandra in Boston on Monday, after a long and painful illness. The family were formerly residents of Newtonville. Mr. Arthur C. Walworth, a son, has his home on Centre street. The pall bearers were Hon. R. R. Bishop, E. C. Hammer, Esq., Hon. David K. Hitchcock, and Henry C. Hayden.

—At the Central Congregational Church, Sunday evening, was held the most interesting floral concert ever participated in by the Sunday school. The pulpit, organ and gas fixtures were elaborately decorated with flowers by the young ladies of the church, but the particularly interesting feature was the placing of floral offerings in a large frame in the chancel. When completed, the design was an immense and most beautiful three sided bank of flowers, of almost every known variety. The idea was conceived and carried out by Mr. Frank W. Gaffield, who justly took much pride in the most successful Sunday School concert ever held by the church. The children were delighted with their work, and the satisfaction which resulted from their labors will undoubtedly do much to strengthen the interest in the Sunday school, of which there has seemed to be need in the past.

—Mrs. E. T. Eldridge celebrated the 17th, and the birthday of her niece, Miss Maria Welch, by inviting 100 poor children of Boston out to spend the day. The invitations were extended through City Missionary Waldron, and he, with six teachers and the children, arrived here at 10 o'clock, and marched to the residence of Mrs. Eldridge, on Otis and Forest streets. The grounds were given up to the children and also the grove opposite. Seats were erected, and all kinds of games provided, so that the children had a very pleasant time. A number of young ladies and gentlemen had been invited to act as waiters, and the children were given a bountiful dinner at noon, and a supper before their departure. During the afternoon, Dr. Porter of Lexington and Rev. Dr. Shinn gave short talks to the children, after which there was singing and recitations, which they enjoyed very much. A large number of Newton people were present, among them Ex-Governor Claflin and wife. The children appeared to enjoy the day immensely, and at 5 o'clock left for home.

—The "Kaffee Klatsch" at the Mill House, last Saturday, was a remarkable success, and the Women's Guild will clear about $200 from the receipts. Visitors were present from all parts of the city, and all the attractions were liberally patronized. The Gypsy fortune tellers drove a brisk trade in their tent, and their predictions created much amusement. "Aunt Sally" was a profitable investment, as the temptation to try one's luck at her pipe proved irresistible, and the old lady was pretty well used up at the close of the evening. Boating on the pond was another feature that proved popular, and many tried the effect of listening to the music over the water. The band received many compliments for their fine playing, and the decorations of the grounds were elaborate and tasteful. The ghosts at the mill had a thriving trade, and the affair was in every way a success, as the entertainments of the Guild always are.

WEST NEWTON.

—Rev. E. P. Wilson, of Watertown, will supply the pulpit of the Congregational church next Sunday morning and evening.

—Last Tuesday, Hannah Swayne was fined $30 and costs for attempting to rescue Dennis Cusick, her nephew, from Officer Purcell.

—The police court has had a busy week, including an average of three or four small cases a day, most of them for intoxication and disturbances of the peace.

—Nickerson's brick block is having the cornice reset, as some of the bricks were out of position and liable to fall upon the heads of passers by.

—The building, corner of Chestnut and Washington streets, in which the Grattan Literary Society hold their meetings, is draped in black and white, in honor of the late Father McGrath.

—Members of the Myrtle Baptist church celebrated the 17th, by turning out and painting the church, and fixing up the grounds, and finishing the day with a strawberry festival in the chapel.

—Mr. Charles Robinson was in Woburn on Tuesday, to attend the 88th birthday of his aunt, Mrs. Daniel Angier. Gov. Robinson was unable to attend on account of the Falmouth celebration.

—Mr. Albert S. Glover was re-elected secretary of the New England Water Works Association, at the annual meeting in New Bedford, Thursday. The next annual meeting will be held in Manchester, N. H.

—The Directors of the Pine Farm Home for boys have appointed Dr. Nott attending physician at the Home, in grateful recognition of his professional services there.

—Mr. C. H. Washburn, late Superintendent of the Pine Farm schools, a few days ago received a letter from the managers, complimenting him for his efficient service while superintendent, and enclosing a check for $1000.

—Monday afternoon the police court had two important cases before it. George Brown, who stole Officer Conroy's dog, was fined $10 and costs, and appealed. James J. Hannigan was held in $1000 for trial by the grand jury, for stabbing James and William Welch at Cold Spring City.

—Children's Sunday at the Unitarian church was observed by a special service in the morning. The decorations were tastefully arranged, among them being the motto, "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not" in wild daisies at the left of the pulpit, and the part taken by the children who took flowers up and placed them on the altar, was very pretty and effective. Some twelve children were christened by the pastor, Mr. Jaynes, after which he preached an interesting and instructive sermon to the children about "the little foxes." He spoke of the vineyards in the old world, how they were hedged round, so as to exclude even the little foxes. He called the heart a garden; the hedges, our good influences; and the little foxes, the thoughts and actions.

—At the Congregational church, the Sunday morning service was conducted by Rev. A. E. Winslow of Somerville, who preached a stirring sermon about "Lending a helping hand." At 6 o'clock the Sabbath school held a service appropriate to children's Sunday. The decorations were on a large scale, flowers from green-houses, garden and field aiding to make the occasion a happy one. The exercises consisted of music by the Sunday school chorus and congregation; recitations by primary department, and a responsive exercise entitled "Jesus the good shepherd," followed by remarks by Mr. Winslow, who spoke on the flowers, of how they never complain, and of how all can learn a lesson of contentment from them. The attendance was large, considering the unpleasant weather.

—The 17th passed off very quietly in this ward, stores were open half a day, and the streets were mostly deserted. The weather was threatening all day, but notwithstanding, busy hands were engaged in decorating the parsonage of the Congregational Church with lanterns and flags. Early in the evening guests began to arrive, till the lawn and house were alive with people. One of the rooms was elaborately and tastefully hung with draperies and curtains;

the mantle piece surmounted with flowers, the room being used for the apron sale, which did a good business, all being attracted by the beauty of the room, which did great credit to Mr. F. B. Barker, who planned and executed the work. Tents were scattered here and there, which, with the tables scattered over the lawn, invitingly tempted any who desired cream and cake. An orchestra furnished music during the evening, and with the lanterns hung from tree to tree and from house to ground, gave the lawn a pleasant and brilliant appearance. It was a pleasant gathering, and must have made quite a sum toward the church building fund.

AUBURNDALE.

—The foundation for the new station building at Woodlawn has been laid, and work is being pushed rapidly.

—Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Butler, and Messrs. Theodore A. and Harry S. Hall are at the Woodlawn Park Hotel for the summer.

—There was a brilliant lawn party on the beautiful grounds of Mr. E. B. Haskell Wednesday afternoon.

—The vestry of the Church of the Messiah has voted a three months' leave of absence to Rev. H. A. Metcalf, and he sails next Tuesday for Europe.

—Mr. Henry Guild and family of Boston are at Auburndale for a fortnight, before going to their summer residence at Squantum.

—Miss Nellie A. Kidder of Bangor, a former graduate of Lasell Seminary, is visiting friends in Auburndale, where she came to attend this year's commencement exercises of Lasell; the village has been full of former students this week.

—Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Bragdon, and the 35 young ladies who accompanied them on their trip to Europe, sailed from Boston, Thursday, in the Pavonia. A large company of their friends accompanied them to the Cunard wharf in East Boston to bid them "bon voyage."

NEWTON LOWER FALLS.

—The funeral of Mrs. Benjamin Neal was held at St. Mary's church, Thursday afternoon at 1.30.

—Although the post office address of the Cottage Hospital is Lower Falls, it is really nearer West Newton or Auburndale, and this village is not expected to grow in that direction.

—Conductor John Bean met with a great misfortune on Sunday. As he was standing near the track in the Boston & Albany yard here, he was struck by the step of a car which was being switched past him, and the blow was so violent that one of the bones of his leg was broken, and his knee cap injured. It will be some time before he will be able to walk.

NONANTUM.

—Mr. Forknall, who contemplates a European trip soon, has resigned his office as president of the S. of C. E., and Mr. Charles Worth, the former vice-president, has been elected to fill his place, and Mr. John Cairns was elected as vice-president.

—Children's Day was observed last Sunday at the North Evangelical church by appropriate services. Pastor Lamb preached on the subject of flowers, from the text, "Consider the Lillies." There were seven children baptized. Music was furnished by a specially trained choir of twenty children. The church was handsomely decorated, the credit of which belongs to Miss Effie Green, who worked indefatigably in procuring and arranging the flowers, assisted by a competent committee.

Insurance.

Mr. J. F. C. Hyde announces that he has purchased the insurance business of the late Major E. S. Farnsworth, and now represents the largest line of companies of any agent doing business in Newton. He offers reliable insurance from loss or damage by fire to any amount, and Mr. Hyde is an excellent man to do business with, as he always sticks to his agreements. Parties who insure with him can depend on being well treated.

The City Government.

The Common Council met Monday evening with President French in the chair. Other members present were: Councilmen Fiske, Edmonds, Dix, Atherton, Kennedy, Hollis, Coffin, Ross, Johnson, Chadwick, Redpath, and Pond.

Papers were received from the board of aldermen, and disposed of in concurrence, most of them without any discussion. Councilman Atherton explained the order appropriating $250 for a striker for the hose house bell at Lower Falls, and stated that Mr. Crehore had given notice that he wished the steam whistle removed from his factory, as his neighbors had complained of it. The whistle costs some $75 a year, and the saying would pay for a striker in a few years.

The Waverley avenue hearing came up at 8 o'clock, and President French called Councilman Kennedy to the chair. Mr. Peter Thatcher appeared, and made the same arguments against taking any land from the heirs of John Capen, as he made in the other board. The objections were ineffectual, however, as the order was passed as it came from the alderman.

The Copley street order was also passed, together with the order in regard to discontinuing a portion of Beacon street.

The Jurors' list was then laid before the council, and a host of substitutions made, the business men of the city evidently objecting to service on a jury.

The order appropriating $14,000, $10,000 for damages by spring floods, and $4000 for the Auburndale tunnel then came up, and gave rise to considerable discussion. Councilman Edmonds objected to the two items being linked together, as though one was tacked on to pass through the merits of the other. Councilman Ross denied this, as the highway committee were unanimous in favor of both.

Councilman Dix said that he should be compelled to vote against the order as it stood. The $10,000 clause he favored, but the other needed explanation. Councilman Kennedy thought it was well to build the tunnel now, as the Auburndale people were willing to help, and another year they might not be.

President French, at the request of Councilman Dix, divided the order, so that the two appropriations could be voted on separately. Councilman Atherton stated that the council had put itself on record, as being in favor of adding the $10,000 to this year's taxes, but as that was impossible now, and the work had to be done, the $10,000 would have to be voted, and added to next year's taxes. Councilman Hollis stated that he objected to spending next year's money, but he saw no other way of getting the work done. A vote was taken, and the $10,000 order passed, 11 to 2.

There was then a lively discussion over the appropriation for the tunnel. Councilman Dix objected, as it was the duty of the council, he thought, not to increase the city debt, and not to spend next year's taxes. If the tunnel was needed this year, the fact was known last fall, and the money for it should have been included in this year's appropriations. If the city waited, he thought the railroad would build the tunnel, as it was their business to provide accommodations for their patrons, under which heading the tunnel came.

Councilman Ross said that the city would lose by waiting. It had already lost in the depreciation of taxable property. Besides, a drain was necessary in that section, and it would cost nearly $2,000 to build one; now the water flowed down into the depot grounds, and the railroad company could hold the city liable for damages. He did not see what difference it would make to build the tunnel this year, and pay for it next, or to build it next year. Councilman Edmonds thought the railroad company would make a good thing of it, by getting the city to help them out, and if a drain was needed, the money for the tunnel might be taken from the appropriations for drains and culverts. He would vote for it, if the money was to be taken out of this year's taxes, but he did not believe in spending next year's income.

Councilman Atherton defended the tunnel, and said it was a necessity for the people of Auburndale, and he thought the city would gain by it, from the increase in the valuation of property.

Councilman Chadwick said that he thought the tunnel was as great a public necessity as the widening of Waverley avenue, as it would accommodate a much greater number of people. The council had voted one, and he thought they could not reasonably object to the other.

Councilman Johnson spoke of the depreciation of property in Auburndale, on the north side of the track. He believed the city had already lost enough to pay for the tunnel. A lot assessed at $1200 had just been sold for $400, and a house assessed at $6200, had been sold for $4000, and these were only sample cases. The valuation of the property had been greatly reduced by the poor railroad accommodations, and the sooner the tunnel was built, the better for the city. Councilman Hollis hoped the tunnel would be built this year, as it was as much a public necessity, as the tunnel in Ward 1. Councilman Kennedy said the $4,000 could not be taken out of the appropriations for drains and culverts, as there was no money there. He also said that there were many things to come up that did not belong to this year's taxes, among which were an addition to the High School building and the public library, and a High School drill shed, and it was a good thing to get this matter out of the way. After more discussion and some talk about the flooded condition of Severn street, the appropriation for the tunnel was passed by a vote of 10 to 3. Councilman Edmonds, Dix and French voting no.

An order was passed that no work should be done upon the tunnel, until the amount to be contributed by the citizens should be paid into the city treasury.

An order passed that the joint standing committee on ordinances should report at the next meeting of the council an ordinance for the consideration of the council for the regulation of the water board, in accordance with a petition received the 29th of last March.

A petition was received from residents of Pelham street, Ward 6, asking for concrete sidewalks. A petition was received from residents of Newton Lower Falls, asking for street lamps on Washington street, near Beacon street, after which the council adjourned.

WEST NEWTON.
Allen's Pond. Second Season.

THE SEASON OF 1886 WILL OPEN JUNE 7.
AFTERNOONS ONLY, EXCEPTING SATURDAYS, TILL JUNE 23.

This pond is the enlargement of the pure and never failing "Cheese Cake," near its source. It is secluded, fenced in and supplied with dressing rooms, swimming-post, spring-board, etc. The number of dressing rooms has been doubled, and the depth of the water increased six inches. Arrangements have been made by which the water can be drawn from the bottom during the day, thus raising the temperature several degrees. The sheet of water—5,000 square feet—is divided by a floating boom into two parts for safety, and is from 6 inches to 5½ feet in depth. The record of the last season shows that this pond meets a real want as yet unsupplied by our city, many of both sexes learning to swim therein. The hours assigned to women have been doubled, and swimming lessons for both sexes will be given in the most approved methods. Bathers will wear tight suits and provide their own towels. Suits and towels, if marked, can be left in care of the attendants, for which a small charge will be made. Strangers may similarly be furnished with towels, etc.

The Painter and the Sitter.

BY G. P. CRANCH.

At his easel sits the painter, at his canvas large and white,
And he gazes at his sitter, in the clear, soft studio light,
And with yielding charcoal deftly draws his outline bold and free, Till the face and form are pencilled,—for a cunning hand has he;
Then in graded semi-circle spreads his colors and his hues,— Whites and reds and sunny yellows, sober grays and browns, and blues,
And the sitter sees the palette (but is hid the canvas face),
Sees the primal law and order,—every color in its place.
Each proportioned to the other,—all seems plain and understood;
And he builds his dream, and trusts the growing picture will be good.
Soon, however, on the palette, while the picture is unseen,
All is mixed in strange confusion, and he says, "What can it mean?"
Can those patches and those scratches ever come to anything?
From such muddy streaks and blotches can a fair creation spring?
For the sitter must not stir to see the work that's going on,
Till the portrait is completed, and the artist's task is done.
Like this puzzled sitter, often, sits believing, doubting man,
On the universe he looks and sees a little of the artist's plan.
Sees with philosophic eye the laws that govern and direct,
Traversing the world in order,—full of discord and defect,
Each a promise of fulfillment, each a hint for hope and faith,
While the Infinite Creator breathes through all his living breath.
Life is rich,—the world is perfect,—all is order, joy and peace;
Can this vision of perfection spanning earth and heaven cease?
Ah! the days grow dark and darker,—and the harmony we seek,
Crossed by bitter winds of discord, turns into a maddened shriek.
Hope is crushed, and faith bewildered,—all is wild confusion whirled,—
And the sceptic laughs,—"It is a dumber's palette, this brave world!"
Where are all your primal colors? where your lovely light and shade?
All is chance and contradiction; out of such what can be made?
I see not the artist's meaning; I see not the end in view;
I must sit and watch his fingers, till the end is carried through!"

But the Painter still is working, through these forms of sin and strife;
Out of all this seeming chaos moulding fairer forms of life;
And one day the patient sitter, from the artist's point of sight,
Shall behold his form transfigured, glowing in the perfect light.

The Lord's Day in the Land of the Pilgrims.

One Sunday morning, during the war of 1812, if we recall the case aright, a post-rider cantered into a New England village with the news of the military movement of the British upon Washington, and in haste spurred his horse across the green of the meeting-house, thereby disturbing the singing of the seventy-second psalm. The deacons emerged from the sanctuary and captured the sacrilegious disturber of the congregation; and on Monday morning they prosecuted him before a magistrate for violating the Lord's day. The point at issue was whether the prisoner was travelling "from necessity," and the highest tribunal of the Commonwealth finally adjudged that if he merely rode post-haste on the public business, without blowing his horn, the deacons were in the wrong; but if he blew his horn while he was riding he was a disturber of the peace as well as a miserable sinner.

But not to explore so remotely, there have, in our day and generation, in the same exemplary Commonwealth of Massachusetts in which the deacons pounced upon the post-rider, been adjudications by the court of the last resort, which are equally droll. In the year of grace, 1864, two honest old codgers were tilling an unproductive farm in the seaside town of Scituate, where seaweed has from time immemorial been used for manure by the country-folk. James and Gamaliel Sampson were the homely names of these husbandmen. They were pious and prudent. In their prudence they had purchased a license, for which they made annual payment, from the owner of a beach near Scituate harbor, distant about four miles from their farm. In their piety they attended "meeting" three times every Sunday, besides teaching in the Sunday school. On Saturday, November 25, 1864, there was a storm which threw upon the beach a large quantity of seaweed. On Sunday evening, November 26, James and Gamaliel, when they left the meeting-house, about half-past seven or eight o'clock in the evening, perceived that the tide was coming in, and that there was a fresh breeze blowing in such a direction as on former occasions had caused seaweed to float away from the beach when the tide rose, and be wholly lost. After grave consultation upon the state of affairs, they procured a pitchfork, an ox-cart and a yoke of oxen, and proceeded therewith to the beach, where they arrived at ten o'clock. There was no house near, and the highway was at a considerable distance. But even if the neighborhood had been populous, all the rest of the good people of Scituate, according to the usage of half-a-dozen generations, were abed and asleep at half-past nine. Arrived at the shore, James pitched the seaweed into the cart, and Gamaliel goaded the oxen into drawing it to the top of the beach, where they tipped out the load above the possible reach of the tide, and then they went home and to bed, and rested from their labors. But their works followed them. Early the next morning the town of Scituate was apprised of the breach of law and morals by other less prudent farmers, whose seaweed had been floated far away. A public prosecution was forthwith instituted against James and Gamaliel for a violation of the Lord's day, and these two flagrant criminals, upon proof of the foregoing facts, were tried, and convicted. Like the hasty post-rider, they were not content with the decision of any tribunal short of the final court of appeal, which in the year of grace 1867 rendered its decision by the mouth of a witty judge, who soon afterwards became Attorney-General of the United States, and whose own quick sense of humor must have occasionally contrasted the occupations of Sunday in Washington, with those of Sunday in Scituate. The decision was "that taking the seaweed was not a work of necessity within the meaning of the law." But the judge added—perhaps as a suggestion to James and Gamaliel for future contingencies: "How it would be if a whale happened to be stranded on the shore we need not determine."

The same court, in the same year of grace, drew a fine distinction between the animal kingdom and the vegetable kingdom under the Sunday law. Works "of necessity" are permissible by the statute. It has sometimes been attempted to gain the decision of the six learned judges of last resort in Massachusetts, whether the work of shaving, executed by a barber upon a customer upon the Lord's day, was indeed charitable when performed with a dull razor. But we believe that this important question remains undetermined. "To save life, or prevent or relieve suffering, and this in the case of animals as well as men," has, however, been pronounced to be charitable by the same learned judge whom we have quoted above. Yet the grave tribunal of which he was a member, almost at the same time, solemnly adjudged that hoeing potatoes at eight o'clock on Sunday morning, which would otherwise have wilted and died in the heat of noonday, was neither necessary nor charitable, and by consequence was unlawful, and subjected to punishment an unlucky shoemaker who was guilty of the act in the year of grace 1866.

The statute book of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts punishes severely not only whoever practices any "game, sport, play or public diversion, except a concert of sacred music," upon the evening of the Lord's day, but also, "whoever is present," wittingly or unwittingly, at any such profane exercise; and, not content with this, it applied the same penalties to "the evening next preceding the Lord's day," unless the diversion shall have been duly licensed by the public authorities. It has been suggested that, under these provisions, any reverend magistrate of the Commonwealth would become a culprit if a malicious neighbor should visit him on a Saturday evening and suddenly dance a jig in his parlor, or unexpectedly producing a pack of cards, should perform in his presence the demoralizing game called solitaire. This, however, may be doubted. Captious critics have also vainly striven to reconcile the letter of the law with the lively performance of operatic music in the Boston churches at the religious services on Sunday. It is even whispered that strains from the "Grande Duchesse" have been heard on such occasions. But, passing all this, there is another provision in the statute book which subjects such outrageous practices as blowing post horns, gathering seaweed or hoeing potatoes on the Lord's day, to further penalties of fine and imprisonment, if they are conducted in such a manner as to disturb divine worship. It therefore becomes a matter of very serious consideration for good people what is and what is not divine worship in Massachusetts, and in the last volume of the judicial reports of the state, just published, we find an amazing definition of it. It seems that Madame Feital, a worthy dame who lived in the city of Charlestown, under the shadow of Bunker Hill monument, broke her leg, or was injured in some way, in an accident which befel a horse-car of the Middlesex Railroad Company on the afternoon of Sunday, September 6, 1868, in which she was riding as a passenger. In a suit brought by her against the railroad corporation, to recover damages for her injury as caused by their negligence, they set up in defence that she was travelling on the Lord's day; to which she rejoined that the allegation was true, but that she was travelling lawfully to attend divine worship. And the parties butted and rebutted and sur-rebutted until the issue was refined to this: That Dame Feital could recover damages for her leg if the services which she was travelling to attend were services for divine worship; but otherwise, under the beneficent law of Massachusetts, the careless corporation would go scot-free.

The case was tried on this narrow issue. Madame Feital, it appears, was a Spiritualist, and usually attended religious services conducted by ministers of her own faith in her own neighborhood in Charlestown. But on this particular Sunday afternoon her meeting-house was closed, and, looking around for some other place to worship, her eye fell upon the newspaper entitled Banner of Light, and fixed itself on an advertisement of a camp-meeting to be held in Malden, at which "Miss Laura Ellis would give physical manifestations in a tent, to which an admittance fee of twenty-five cents would be charged." The railway of the Middlesex Railroad Company runs to Malden, and Madame Feital was duly conveyed to the camp-ground in the cars of that corporation, and then and there attended the services conducted by Miss Ellis, the nature of which was testified to be as follows: Miss Ellis was put into a box with her hands tied; music was heard coming from the box; and when it was opened Miss Ellis was found with her hands untied, and a ring that had been on her finger was then on the end of her nose. "It was on the way home from these services that Madame Feital broke her leg." The counsel for the railroad company argued that this was not divine worship, but was an "idolatrous show" and was adapted not to the edification but to the disturbance of "serious people." The jury, however, found that it was divine worship, and gave Madame Feital $5,000 damages for her leg. The questions of idolatry and jugglery were afterwards gravely and exhaustively argued before the six judges of the court of last resort by eminent counsel on both sides, and the court after solemn consultation, refused to disturb the verdict.

We think that the railroad corporation were righteously mulcted. Their plea of Sunday travelling, to avoid the just penalty for negligence, was a mean one at the best. And we are not disposed to dispute the ruling of six so learned judges. We merely call the attention of such of our readers as reside in the good State of Massachusetts, or are interested in its affairs, to the fact that if anybody had blown a post-horn, or gathered sea-weed, or hoed potatoes, in such a way as to disturb Miss Laura Ellis while she was in the box, whether the ring was on her finger or her nose at the time, the offender would not only have been liable to the ordinary penalties for the violation of the Lord's day by unnecessary and uncharitable labor, but also to "imprisonment in the jail not exceeding thirty days, or fine not exceeding fifty dollars, for disturbing divine worship." Let summer visitors to Massachusetts heed and beware. —[New York Evening Post, July, 1874.]

On Religion in Schools.

[From Matthew Arnold's Philadelphia Address on Education.]

Some twenty years ago I was struck by a remark that was made to me by Cardinal Antonelli while I was visiting the Italian schools. "So you have come to see our schools," he said, "our popular schools? Many people will tell you that popular education among us is nothing at all, or next to nothing; they would tell you you would be unable to find anything to report on to your Government; but you may tell your Government this," the Cardinal continued, "that illiterate as the Italian population is said to be, and as I suppose is, if you mix with the people at any festival and listen to their criticism and to what they say you will find it almost undeniable right, and the people, you can conclude, can most surely be allowed to have a certain sort of education." I thought "What stolid insensibility or inability to discern." At the same moment there arose to my memory the admirable sentiment of the school-master of the seventeenth century, John Comenius, fixing the universal scope and aim of education. The aim, he says, is to train generally all who are born men with all which is human.

Could this be considered as human? Rather is it not a proof that our humanity is raw and undeveloped, if we confound the two together? For we are in bondage, Goethe says, and out of that bondage we have to rise. We know that, however general it may be around us, it is not less a bondage and an evil.

THE AVERAGE MAN.

Immediately after my arrival in this country, the other day, I happened to come across a speech of one of your politicians, whom I hope I may venture to call a friend of mine, Senator Hawley, of Connecticut. He was praising the system of government of the United States, and he praised it as being "a Government of, by and for the average man." I will not dispute that in politics this may be a benefit, but remember that in educational culture it is precisely the slough of the common and average which we have to cast off and rise up from. The common and average is our danger. It is comparatively an easy attainment, but no true friend of education will be satisfied so long as this is attained and nothing more. In popular education at present the common and average thing is the ability to read, write and calculate and the possession of a certain amount of useful knowledge. This is what in progressive nations we expect the whole population to attain and what they do attain. If we ask for the result of this, we shall find it to be in the main that the whole population learn to read the newspapers. That is what modern education really means; this is what popular education leads up to, and we have to congratulate ourselves when this result has been achieved, and to think that we have the promotive and progress and civilization.

I am not sure what is said of our common schools resemble yours in these respects, but I hope you will listen to me to some points in which the common schools of Germany and France succeed better than those of England in training their pupils in what is really human. You may then judge whether your schools in America are more like those of France and Germany.

I will take first what is certainly a main agent in teaching man's soul and feelings—religion. In England religion is excluded from the official programme of the popular school. If it is taught, it is taught outside of the official hours, and subject to private and local regulation. Religious liberty, it is said, requires this. If religion is taught at the public expense, what religion is it to be? If it is the religion of the majority, the minority would not be satisfied. Religion must not, therefore, be a proscribed school matter at all. In German countries—for German Switzerland is just the same as German in this matter—religion stands as one of the foremost subjects of instruction in the public schools. Instead of being, as in England, a subject never introduced in official programmes, a subject which people are to avoid, it is laid out with the greatest care and examined with special diligence and industry by the inspectors. In religion one may say the three large chief denominations are no longer predominant in Germany—the Evangelical, the Protestant and Catholic and the Jews. Between the Protestants and the Catholics the public deals both in theory and in practice with absolute fairness. There is no persecution and no proselytism. So far as the action of the Administration goes, so complete is the confidence of the people in its fairness, that in the lower classes of Evangelicals or Catholics, you can find not infrequently the Catholics taking religious instruction with the majority. In the upper classes the law requires the minority in these mixed schools to be separate and to receive instruction from their own sect.

ENGLISH AND GERMAN SCHOOLS.

With us in England the difficulty of including religion in the school programme is caused by sects of Protestantism. Throughout Protestant Germany the religious instruction in Protestant schools is based on the Lutheran profession, and all denominations are expected to follow. With us, with individual churches, what is the result? Diversity of religion, rendering a diversity of instruction; in Germany the law. I do not think that in Germany, where the spirit of sect has been less cultivated than among ourselves, Protestants feel instruction in the public schools in these matters to be disadvantageous. I could not hear of any complaints on the subject, and I was very curious to learn how the working classes in the German cities, who are said to be greatly estranged from the Christian religion, take the obligatory religious instruction. In Catholic Saxony, the country which is reported to be the stronghold of Socialism, I asked an inspector what proportion of the working classes he thought were Socialistic, and were opposed to the established religion. "At least two-thirds," he answered. "Well, then," said I, "how do they like all this Lutheran religion for their children?" "They don't like it at all," he replied, "but they have to submit to it." He added that the religious instruction did the children good; that the mothers in general can perceive this, and some even of the Socialistic fathers. In speaking of the same subject when I was in Berlin, to a man whose name will be well received in every university, Prof. Munsen, the historian, I told him how surprised I had been, after I had heard of the decay of religion in Germany, to find out how important a place religion held in the programme of the public schools. He agreed that it did so, and he, too, thought that it was a good thing, and he said that the actual religious instruction given was dogmatic, and it was a fault of the persons in authority that they made it strictly so; but in religion he thought the school instruction in general a good thing. He quoted words to me of Goethe, which I remember: "He who has art and science has religion," but he quoted them with an addition which I had often to forget: "He who has not art and science let him have religion."

In a nation where the Government is, as Senator Hawley says, of, by and for the average man, we may imagine that religious instruction should be imposed upon the schools, because the man, not having heard of science, requires religion. I doubt whether the religious feeling of England would not be as much shocked as the Democratic feeling of America by the notion of teaching religion in the public schools which uncultivated people require, but cultivated people do not. So that, while there is a feeling of sect, the spirit of religion makes it impracticable to introduce religion in our public schools. The religious instruction in the public schools of German countries seems to me one of the best and most effective parts of the school work.

RELIGION IN SCHOOLS.

I have had a long experience with school teachers and schools, but seldom have I seen children as once in a Saxon school I heard them deal with theological questions in a surprising manner to me. In spite of the necessary antagonism of terms; in spite, perhaps, of their necessary insolubleness, they are directly interesting. But if one might ever doubt as to the probable effect of these theological questions, one could have none of the good effects of what is, after all, the chief and best part of the instruction given in German schools, the learning by heart of a number of sayings, parables, and Lutheran hymns. I lay stress on hymns, because such hymns are a part of literature of which I keenly feel the effects, but of which I have more than once spoken disparagingly. The German hymns are, however, better than ours. Who that watches the touching effects that come over children's faces could doubt that the soul and feelings were reached in a way which we cannot attain with the program of useful knowledge that we have in our public schools.

It is said that the alienation of the working classes from Christianity proves that all instruction in the public schools would be of little avail. I think the alienation is exaggerated; but, even admitting it to be as great as any one supposes, I feel sure that in the German language sentiment and religion arise with the religious instruction often and often continued, and work after every positive element of Christianity in a man may become quite estranged.

It is in the religious instruction of the German schools that we find an educational force of real value, which in our schools is wanting. You may know whether it is wanting in your schools also. But, curiously enough, we find in France likewise in the public schools a type of religious instruction which seems of high interest and value, but which would also be to the public schools of England quite impossible.

Not that religion holds that place in the programme of French public schools which it held in those of France twenty years ago, when I had last seen the French schools. The chaplains are gone from the public schools, and religion is gone from the programme, and it may no longer be taught in the public schools at the school-houses. True moral and civic instruction has a place in the school programme and regulations, and high commissaries say that the schools are to teach the existence of a God in accordance with that philosophy they call a farce and a fraud. But in Paris, that great center of the public education which is now going forward in France—in Paris, the municipality, which provides the maintenance of public schools, will not have the name of God introduced in their teaching, and it has even sanctioned a school manual altogether hostile to religion and contemptuous of it. As to the moral and civic instruction of the French schools, I saw no signs of its being taught so that the souls and minds of those receiving it were reached by the instruction.

MURDERED.

The body of Julius Baer was found by freighters five miles west of here Tuesday morn, in a terribly mangled condition. His head and face were smashed, so as to be hardly recognized, and numerous wounds were found on his body. Mr. Baer was agent for the great blood medicine, Sulphur Bitters. Robbery was undoubtedly the motive, as he was well known to have a large sum of money on his person. As we go to press there is no clue to the perpetrators.—Colorado Press.

If it were possible to get the testimony of the multitude who have used HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA for debility, languor, lassitude, and that general feeling of stupidity, weariness and exhaustion which every one feels during this season, we should be able to present to our readers such an overwhelming mass of commendatory messages, that the few who have not tried it would do so at once. It is a positive fact, and has been so effectually demonstrated that no one to-day denies it, that Hood's Sarsaparilla contains more real medicinal value than any article before the people.

What a Man Did with Kidney Complaint

DRACUT, MASS.
MESSRS. C. I. HOOD & CO., Lowell, Mass.:
Dear Sirs—I have suffered from kidney complaint and biliousness for fifteen years. Have tried everything and never got any good. Last January, before I commenced taking HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA, everything I ate bloated me all up, pain in my chest and arms, headache and dizzy. I could not get up without feeling weary and all fagged out. Many mornings I was obliged to lie down on the lounge. To do any work seemed almost impossible. Have taken two bottles. The backache, dizziness, pain in my chest and arms, and that feeling of intense weariness are all gone. I can eat anything and it does not press me at all. Feel just like work; in fact, like a new man. Can heartily recommend HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA, and hope all who desire to know anything about it will come to me and ask what I think of it. Very truly yours,

WALTER THORP, NEWTON CENTRE.

The simplest and best awning ever made. It need not be removed to close the blinds; can be put on or removed in one minute by any one from the inside. It presents no folds to catch the rain or dust, and therefore is very durable. The awning can be attached to the window any distance from the top, so as to give a passage of air over it. It can be opened at either side, or both, to give an increased circulation of air. In case of removal, can, at slight expense, be made to fit any window. No carpenter needed, spring or fall. It costs no more than any other style of awning, much less than most.

I have fourteen styles and colors of Belvidere double-faced awning stripes. Samples of the goods and model of the fixtures can be seen at any time on Pelham street, or anywhere in Newton or vicinity on request by letter or otherwise.

A LITURGICAL SERVICE.

ABSTRACT OF PAPER BY REV. F. B. HORN-BROOKE.

[From the Christian Register.]

There is, undoubtedly, among liberal Christians a constantly increasing tendency toward the use of liturgical forms. The number of those who earnestly desire them may be much smaller than their enthusiastic lovers imagine; but, small as it is, it has this in its favor,—that it is a growing number. As a rule, the young favor some form of liturgical service; and any movement that has youth on its side is, in the nature of things, predestined to prevail.

For this tendency toward the adoption of liturgical forms, the reasons are to be easily found. The first and most obvious one is that we have educated our young people to worship in that way. However stout the resistance to even the smallest portion of anything liturgical may be in the church; there is always unanimous acquiescence in a printed service for the Sunday-school. This result might be averted, if the children attended the church service. But now that two services are usually considered too hard for the children of this delicate generation, and now that, for some unknown reason, the Sunday-school is usually deemed of more importance than the church,—there is nothing to limit the influence of this early habit of liturgical worship.

Another reason for the increasing desire for written forms is the greater development among us of the love of what is most fitting in sight and sound. There may be in this an excess of refinement. We may and we ought to deplore this, if it only means concern for the outward, out of all proportion to, and with total unconcern for, what is inward and real. But, so long as there are those who are so unfortunate as to have fine tastes, there is no valid reason for making what is most needful for them appear in unpleasant forms.

Still another reason that may be given for the increasing desire for liturgical forms is the lack of exceptional fervor. In times of great and deep spiritual movement, men and women are raised above themselves; and when they come together they express a spirit that carries them whither it will. Then, forms of service are needless, and formal regulations an offense. But such times are infrequent. They indicate the rare moments, the Sabbath days, of the soul. In the mean time there is religious life, but it is regular, sober, perhaps tame. For all that, it must be sustained; and the question is whether it shall be sustained as if the spirit of transcendent form were still present, and so often be made to appear hysterical and unreal, or whether the best utterances of the choicest hours be taken only as a sign and symbol, not of what is, but of what may be, not of attainment, but of aspiration, not of the actual, but of the possible. It is not necessarily the only way. We may ourselves doubt whether it is even the better way. But still the fact remains that many in times like our own, and reasoning in the way mentioned, do come to the conclusion that it is the only and the best way.

Now, coming to what is of more immediate import, how do we propose to meet this tendency in our body? The best course for us seems to be to heed wisely the signs of the times, to sympathize with tendencies in which we ourselves may not share, to help others in the way that seems best for them, and to try to understand some of the reasons that they may fairly urge on their side of the matter. In favor of some form of religious service, it may well be urged that the real union of a religious organization will be found not so much in its creeds and catechisms as in its prayers. If we waited until there was perfect agreement about every intellectual statement, we should wait forever, and perish in the waiting. A bond of union can be found in no way more truly than in the fact that people are in union in their worship, in a deep, central, and permanent conviction of the divine life and love. There could then be no misunderstanding that, while in many things we stood apart, our hearts were at one, as we stood face to face with God.

A form of service, if it is a good one, emphasizes what is so often neglected or unduly subordinated. It shows that we have thought enough of it to take pains for it. Its arrangement will often tend to exclude the spirit of mere display in pulpit or choir. It will declare that religious edification is the purpose of the hour, and that everything that does not tend to that end is out of place. In short, it will put an unmistakable emphasis upon the religious and devotional function of the Church.

It is said that people must grow tired of hearing the same things over and over again from childhood to old age. But all of us do not feel that way. To many, the choicest forms of speech, like those of nature, have infinite suggestiveness. As the mountains and the ocean are ever and never the same, so the mighty language of aspiration and trust never changes, and yet ever reveals new thoughts and wakens new emotions. The lights and shadows of experiences fall upon it, and reveal unlooked-for sources of gladness and comfort. The real danger in our times is not so much in the direction of growing weary of the best things as of not pausing over anything long enough to find out that it is the best. And, again, it ought never to be forgotten that reiteration is in itself a source of effectiveness, since nearly all minds are most convinced of the truths they oftenest hear. But forms of worship ought to grow out of the spirit of a congregation, not to be imposed upon it. It is vain to attempt to create a spirit of life by a form of worship, however beautiful. Nothing, indeed, is more impressive than the audible and accordant responses of all hearts in a fitting and noble service. But if, in consequence of the personal influence of the minister or the desires of a few, such a service is accepted, and some refuse to engage in a form which violates all that associates itself in their minds with the idea of worship, and others cannot, or never do say "Amen," and the words seem to freeze on the uncongenial air, and hearts are not quickened to earnest responsiveness, it is proof that the time is not yet.

In this divided state of sentiment in our body, it is equally dangerous and harmful to do too much or to do nothing. But it is our right and duty to prepare to meet future demands in the best possible way; to be ready to move most effectively in the needful direction, when the time comes.

The frequent reading of what is best, helps us to say what is best in us in the best manner. And if it is true, as Jeremy Taylor says, that we learn to pray by praying, what might we not hope in the greater helpfulness as well as appropriateness and beauty of our public devotions from the influence exerted upon our ministry of the garnered wealth of the richest souls from the Psalmists to Theodore Parker and Dr. Martineau! Such work should prove a means of spiritual quickening. It would reveal the fact that as a body we stood without qualification and without compromise for the religious life. It would be undeniable evidence that we were in unison with the spiritual aim and tendency of the ages. It would be an ever-present reminder that prayer, from which religion proceeds and upon which it rests, is no accident in man's progress, but an eternal necessity of his nature; that

"so the whole round earth is every way Bound by gold chains about the feet of God."

Graves of Theodore Parker and Mrs. Browning.

The Porta a Pinta is one of the eastern gates of Florence. Through it passes the street that crosses the thick-shaded valley of the Arno, and winds by high-walled gardens and pleasant villas to the lofty summit of Fiesole. Close to the right hand of the gate a wall some twenty feet high starts out of the city wall, and, suddenly curving southward, goes for about two hundred yards parallel with it, and then abruptly turns westward and joins the wall. In its southern front are plain iron gates, opening into a small court. Opposite to them is a similar pair of gates, over which is written, in French, "They rest from their labors, and their works follow them."

This is the Protestant cemetery. Within its high walls and close under these ancient battlements lie what is mortal of Elizabeth Barrett Browning and Theodore Parker.

Their names were enough to draw our feet thither. The Sabbath day finds us at the gates. The concierge responds to the bell from a neighboring cottage, and we are ushered into the sacred resting-place. The ground slopes up from the outer to the inner wall both from the south and the east. A broad path ascends from the gate to near the rear of the enclosure, where a handsome marble column is surmounted by a cross. At right angles with this path another passes from the wall of the cemetery to that of the city. On the first path, about half way up, not more than six or eight rods from the entrance, on the left-hand side, just over an outer border of box and an inner one of roses, is a small square, sufficiently large for but two bodies. It is enclosed by a low iron rail, resting on four low gray sandstone pillars. In the centre of the lot is a small block of the same stone, some eight inches square and high, with a cross engraved on the top. Over the little lot the myrtle is slowly and carelessly growing; and a pot, with the tall, flowerless stalk of an unhandsome plant, was negligently placed near the head of the grave.

This is the "long home" of Mrs. Browning. The sun lay too fiercely upon it at that hour to allow the place to convey all the tender impressions that one could properly expect. Still, the roses glowing on every side, the tall, slim cypresses that guarded the outer wall, the gray old walls of the city rising high overhead, and covered thick with ivy, the intense quiet of the spot, and, above all, the mountains of mingled brown and green that lifted themselves high above the walls and the valleys beyond, filling all the horizon with strength and beauty—these made the spot worthy of her whose body slept below. The charm of the purple sunset was subsequently thrown over the scene. But the full blaze of that harvest sun was more accordant with the former, certainly more with the present life of her great soul than any fading of the glimmering landscape—any tokens of approaching dark. Her eyes, powerless to confront the blaze of the sun, delighted to gaze unwinking on the fuller effulgence of truth. No writer of this age saw it more clearly or pronounced its decrees with more authority. As a prophetess of God, she announces his curses on America for her sin against her children—prophecies which have been terribly fulfilled. With like courage, she uttered like warnings against England for her treatment of the poor, which, unless that government speedily repents, abolishes the system of caste and crime, will as assuredly bring upon itself like calamities. Italy, in its struggles, won her sympathy; in its democratic chiefs, her confidence. The overthrow of those leaders and the putting back of her liberties under the heel of France and despotism, would have met with her most fearful sympathies and most burning indignation. Thus we muse over the narrow house of this scholarly, gifted, consecrated woman. We leave her in the warm, bright sun, which her nature loved so well, in a garden full of roses. No monument marks her grave. The straggling ivy is its only covering. Whether this is to be her sole memorial or not I did not learn. It would not be unlike her husband, judging from his works, to leave the spot untouched. Silence is golden.

Pass up the path to the central cross, and turn to the right. Go a few feet toward the wall. The path is lined with young cypresses. Close to it, on the left or north side, under the cypresses, in a cool and perpetual shadow, is a large and thick, gray sandstone slab, with this simple inscription:

tion: "Theodore Parker, born at Lexington, Massachusetts, United States of America, August 24, 1810. Died at Florence, May 10, 1860."

The spot is better kept than that of Mrs. Browning, and is in a pleasanter spot—less slightly, less sunny. The thick grass about it was wet with the dew at that after-mid-day hour. The grave was overrun with ivy and myrtle. Two rose-bushes were flourishing near the headstone, and a small evergreen shrub was growing near his feet. The tall cypresses covered it with their dense shade. From under their boughs you could look out eastward and see the hills of Fiesole across the valley, with their bright villas—the tall gray tower of its ancient cathedral, and the lofty seat where Lorenzo De Medici and his friends held high converse on Plato. The spot was very inviting from its coolness, shade, and silence. The chirp of a few birds alone displaced the Sabbath stillness with a Sabbath melody.

I could have sat for hours in such a holy retreat; but alas! the emotions which the grave excited were not of the calm and blessed character that the day, the scenery, and the place suggested. One could not look upon the spot without feeling that, after all, the desire of Jacob and Joseph was eminently human: "Bury me with my fathers." A foreign land may do to look at; but our own is the land to live and die in. Pleasant and retired as is the spot, soft and grand as is the scenery, the graveyard at Lexington is preferable.

Nearly opposite to Mrs. Browning is the grave of Arthur Hugh Clough, neatly adorned with a simple headstone and evergreens. Its headstone records this as the last act of affection on the part of his afflicted wife and sister.

The little cemetery has many other graves, though none of mark. A verse of Whittier's lament for Sophia Sturge, inscribed over an English lady, reminds us of America, as do not a few tablets with the names of our cities under those of the buried.

We left the shady and the sunny graves, thinking that perhaps they typified the souls of their human occupants.—[Gilbert Haven.]

NEWTON CENTRE.

WALTER THORPE, Newton Centre, is agent for the GRAPHIC, and receives subscriptions and makes collections for it. He also makes terms for advertising, hand-bills, and all other kinds of printing. Mr. Thorpe is also agent for the Rochester (N. Y.) Chase Brothers' New England Nurseries, who have the largest variety in America (with one exception) of fruit and ornamental trees, small fruits, roses, shrubs, etc., etc. Any parties not called upon (within a few miles of Newton Centre), wishing to see large books of illustrations of fruit, roses, trees, etc., with prices as low as the lowest, can, by sending him a postal card, have them shown at their own homes. The reputation of Chase Bros. is A No. 1. Also Real Estate to sell and to Rent. For particulars see Real Estate column on this page.

—Rev. Andrew P. Peabody, D. D., of Cambridge will preach in the Unitarian Church Sunday morning.

—Mrs. W. E. Webster and Mr. A. G. Webster leave in a few days for a visit in Kentucky and the West.

—Forepaugh's Circus, bound for Boston, passed over the railroad Sunday morning. Two trains of cars were loaded.

—Rev. Dr. Edward Judson of New York is expected early in July, to preach and act as pastor for three months, for the Baptist Church.

—Mrs. Maria Upham Drake of this village, was one of the speakers at the annual meeting of the W. C. T. U. of Worcester county on Thursday.

—The Kenrick Bridge floated down the "Charles" some five months ago. The question with quite a number of the inhabitants in the vicinity of Oak Hill is—"when shall we have another?"

—Mrs. Judge Lowell gave a reception Saturday afternoon at her home at Chestnut hill, from 4 to 7, for her pastor and his wife, Rev. and Mrs. Howard N. Brown of the Brookline Unitarian Church.

—A delightful four o'clock tea was given on Wednesday afternoon, by Miss Clarke, Pleasant street. Miss Clarke has recently returned from a sojourn of several months with friends in California.

—On Friday evening, June 18th, all persons interested in the celebration of the morning of July Fourth, with an "antique and horrible parade," are invited to meet in Mason Hall to conclude arrangements.

—The play ground on the south side of the Mason school is under repairs; the gravel has been removed in part, and a heavy surface of loam added, which will be seeded. The long vacation will give it time to grow.

—Did you know that Knapp keeps most anything that you want—Oils, mixed paints, varnish; a line of hardware, such as screws, nails, door bolts, hooks and staples, axes, hatchets, hammers, wood-saws, farming tools, etc. Flour $6.00; fine butter 23 and 25 cts.

—Children's Sunday was celebrated by a concert of the First Church Sunday School at 4.30 o'clock, and by the Methodist Sunday School at 5 o'clock. The dark skies did not prevent a full attendance and appreciation, and there were many voices of children rejoicing in the "Hosanna to the Son of David."

—Dr. and Mrs. S. F. Smith will pass the summer at their cottage in Hull, and with them will be their grandson, a student at Colby University, Waterville, Me., and a grand-daughter, a student at Wellesley College, children of Rev. D. A. W. Smith of the Rangoon Mission, Burmah.

—Five of the six prizes given at the spring tournament of the High School club were brought to this ward. Frederick H. Hovey, Summer street, class of '86, received the first prize in men's singles. F. H. Hovey, '86, and F. E. Fennessey, Cedar street, '87, took first prize in men's doubles. Miss Rice, Centre street, '87, and F. H. Hovey, '86, won the first prize in ladies' and gentlemen's doubles.

—The Boston & Albany Railroad is constructing two bridges over its tracks on the line of the Brookline division of the Circuit road. One is at Cypress street, and the other at Brookline Village. The material for the abutments is from the quarry of the Roxbury Stone Company at Parker Hill. The varied colors of this stone will make the architecture of the bridge very attractive and more pleasing to the eye than any bridge on the line of the road.

—Mr. George H. Coffin, formerly residing here on Chase street, and doing business with his father under the title of Z. E. Coffin & Sons, will be welcomed in his return to Newton Centre, where he was reared in our schools and studied at Brown University. He has made a fine record as a successful teacher in Providence, R. I., during these years. He now returns to business life on account of his health, and will be connected with his father in Boston. He will occupy with his family the Rice house on Centre street, which is made vacant by the departure of Rev. and Mrs. C. H. Carpenter for Japan.

—Dr. S. F. Smith will read an original poem at the fiftieth anniversary of the First Baptist Church, Chelsea. His hymn read at Dedham last week on the occasion of the dedication of the Rural Home of the Boston Children's Friend Society is given in another column. This new home for boys is a fine old estate with good dwelling, situated near the Gov. Fairbank's house, which is the oldest residence in New England. It is opened under the most approved methods, and all who wish to serve "God and their Native Land" should use their influence to bring thither any young boys not otherwise provided for. It is just a fine drive to the precincts of our good neighbor, Dedham, and it is hoped that many Newton people will make themselves acquainted with and patrons of this noble institution. Hereof, fail not, even if you delay until the autumn, when this, the oldest of the villages on the banks of the Charles river, celebrates its two hundred and fiftieth birthday.

—A daughter was born on Thursday to Alderman and Mrs. E. H. Mason.

—The water mains on Summer street and Knowles street are being extended, and work is to begin on Walnut street next week.

—The ladies of the Congregational Society at the Highlands, held a lawn party on the grounds of W. C. Strong, Esq., Thursday afternoon, which was well attended and netted a goodly sum.

—The young ladies of St. Andrew's parish, Chestnut Hill, gave a strawberry festival Tuesday afternoon and evening for the benefit of the church. There was a large attendance and a liberal sum was cleared.

—The Country Week Club solicited and receive on Wednesday afternoons, at the residence of Dr. B. K. Pierce, Crescent avenue, contributions of fruit and flowers, in aid of the Boston Fruit and Flower Mission.

—Acres and acres of daisy blossoms can be seen in the Garden City just now. There is a fine display on the hill-side near Reservoir station. Their white caps will take possession of every field in full force, if not forbidden by a superior and more useful army of occupation.

—On Wednesday afternoon, three men were discovered lounging about the premises of Mr. Edward H. Tennessey, Cedar street. They attempted to steal a litter of pups, and were seen with them hidden under their coats. The pups were of fine breed, and quite valuable; Officers Heustes and Foster were called, and took the men to the lock-up of the police station.

—Dr. Bigelow's house at Oak Hill is up and boarded in. This was among the last country residences planned by the late H. H. Richardson of Brookline. It will be in harmony with its surroundings. Though situated on a hill in Middlesex county, the range of vision extends across Suffolk county to the "Inner bight of Massachusetts Bay, called Boston Harbor."

—If you wish to ride to Newton Centre from Boston by the way of Riverside, your ticket will be thirty-one cents, distance fourteen miles. For forty-seven cents you may ride from Boston to Boston via Brookline and Newton, stopping at twenty-one stations in one hour and fifteen minutes, distance twenty-two miles. Three of these points are flag stations, as was Newtonville forty-five years ago, when it was called Hull's crossing, and when Walnut street was "a pleasant place."

—One of the old Newton farms was that of Mr. John Fuller who came here in 1644, and bought a thousand acres of land known now as Newtonville. Mention was made last week in the GRAPHIC of the tomb of General Hull, at the Centre street cemetery. He married Mr. Fuller's daughter, and succeeded to the Fuller estate, the colonial home being near the present residence of ex-Governor Claflin. Gen. Hull was born in Derby, Conn., in 1753; was graduated at Yale in 1772. He served under General Washington in the Continental army, in 1777 was Major, in 1779 commissioned Lieut. Colonel of the Third Regiment. At the close of the war he settled in Newton, and practiced law. In 1805 he went to Michigan as Governor of the Territory, which office he held till 1814. During the war of 1812, he was appointed General-in-command of the army of the North-west in the summer of 1812. He surrendered his army at Detroit to General Brock, so the war began in humiliation. He was tried and condemned to be shot, but was pardoned by President Madison, in consideration of past services. He returned to Newton at the close of his service, and lived here the remaining years of his life, and died November 29, 1823. The street which passes through the "Fuller farm," from Walnut street, near Mill street, to Murray street, a mile in length, is called Hull. This appears to be the only land mark remaining. Fuller street, running between West Newton and Newton Centre, was probably a part of the original purchase.

—Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Carpenter leave in a few days for the East. They propose to locate in Yesso, the northern island of Japan, latitude 41 deg. 24 min., and 45 deg. 30 deg. North. They go first to the principal city, Matsmai from this point they will move northward, and acquire the Aino language (pronounced I-no) and preach and teach; they go at their own expense, and their very successful years in Oriental Christian work hitherto, give promise that they will be able to reach this Aino race, to which the Christian religion has never been carried. The area of the island is about 62,500 square miles, population 120,000. The northern part is very fertile, the forest trees of our latitude thrive there, the elm, birch, oak. Wheat is raised there, salmon abounds in the waters; coal and iron are mined, also gold and silver. The people were, in ages past, the masters of the whole Empire of Japan, but were conquered and driven to the North. Mr. Carpenter proposes to reduce the language to writing, and give the people the Scripture in their own vernacular. It is but thirty years since the guns of Commodore Perry knocked for admission in Yeddo Bay, and now an American family can with safety go there and take up their residence, and declare the "glad tidings." Mrs. Carpenter will be greatly missed in the Thompsonville Sunday School, where she has been an earnest worker; also in all good ways her strong sympathy and consecrated talents have made the years that she has passed since her return, full of the divinest fruits of Christian culture.

—The second edition of the Baby Pathfinder for June is out, and still another is promised for next week. Mr. Weeks apparently believes in weekly editions.

NEWTON UPPER FALLS.

—Rev. Thomas DeGruchy of the Baptist Church has received a call from a new society at Revere, with a large increase in salary.

—Some fifteen members of the Echo Bridge Council, R. A., in Spear's barge, visited the Waverley Council last Tuesday evening, and were royally entertained and feasted there.

—The program for the grand fete up river, June 17, was successfully carried out, and in next week's GRAPHIC a complete report of the day's doings will be given, together with the participants and committees who had it in charge.

—President Everett of the boat club has a new "shell" on the river, 31 feet in length, out of which he was handsomely precipitated while practicing one evening recently. He is thinking of naming it "Cleveland," because of its "throwing-out" proclivities.

—Born at Natick, June 8, Frank Warren Flagg, whose happy grandpa did not in consequence postpone or fail to attend at the Flagg-Dyson boat race June 17, as the latter evidently expected, and perhaps hoped. Quite to the contrary, grandpa was there with a renewed vigor, which the newly arrived grandson had given him.

—Rev. L. T. Cunningham is adding another story to his store building at his residence on Boylston street, and extending the same over the drive-way to the stone embankment eastward, which, when finished, will be occupied as a church for his society, which now numbers several, mostly from Highlandville.

—The excellent readings of Edward L. Collins at the men's strawberry festival last week received a far different reception from his auditors than was given him when last he read here at Prospect Hall. He has improved since then and knows his audience better and governed himself accordingly in his selections.

—John T. Thomason, as usual in such undertakings, made a decided hit as auctioneer at the men's festival, which he carried out in a great and glorious style, creating much amusement by his natural wit and queer sayings. He is equal to any occasion or emergency.

—The United States Fireworks Co. are doing a driving business, being compelled to work day and night in order to meet their orders. They would have been awarded the Boston contract for July 4, but for the "cry-baby" interference of one of the commissioners who had the matter in charge, and in order to keep peace and harmony in the board, the others gave in to his wishes, notwithstanding a unanimous recommendation of the subordinate committee, who were appointed to recommend to the commissioners who to contract with for the same.

Base Ball Notes.

The Blue Stars of South Boston came out last Saturday to try conclusions with Captain Turner's aggregation of ball tossers, and went home fully assured that the Athletics could play ball at least a "little bit." For their two successive defeats, the Athletics retaliated in grand style by beating the boys from "Modern Athens" in a well contested game. The game was conspicuous for its magnificent battery work, and also for the out-field work of Smith, who captured no less than six difficult runnings, each of which would have been good for two bases. The score—

Amateur and Professional

At a meeting of the American Cyclists Union at the Commonwealth Hotel, Monday, the racing rules were overhauled and the following, defining amateurs and professionals, drawn by Prof. Barnard of Wellesley College, were adopted:

An amateur wheelman is any person who has never, either in public or in private, raced or exhibited his skill for a public or for a private stake, or for a purse, or for gate money, and who has never, either in public or in private, raced or exhibited his skill for a public or for a private stake, or for a purse, or for gate money, and who has never competed under a false name, and who has never backed, or allowed himself to be backed, either in a public or private race.

A professional wheelman is one who, at any time, in any degree, has violated his amateur standing as defined above.

The temporary officers chosen at the time of the league meet were formally placed in nomination. After the election the committee will be appointed, and the membership committee will act on the many applications already received.

A Tribute to Lasell.

(Zion's Herald.)

The present week our beautiful and popular Seminary at Auburndale has its anniversary. Last Sabbath its old and much-esteemed principal, Rev. Dr. Cushing, preached an admirable Baccalaureate discourse. On Monday evening the young ladies had their attractive and successful class day. Tuesday evening was the always welcome principal's reception, and on the day of our publication the Commencement exercises proper occur. Principal Bragdon was never doing better service for our young women than at the present time.

At Eliot Church.

On Sunday last, Rev. David Gregg, D. D., of New York, preached two very able and eloquent sermons at Eliot church. That in the morning from the text, "The face of Jesus Christ" was very unique in conception, and crowded with deep and serious thought. The Bible is an album in which appear under differing conditions, the face of Jesus. One is the heroic face, in which he is bent resolutely to go to Jerusalem, well knowing what would befall him there. Another is his face in the dust, bowed down with grief and suffering, bearing the sins of men. Another is a face "marred more than any man's," having suffered ignominy, reproach, insult, and death. This face bears the deep lines and furrows, made by man's sins, his own rejection, being forsaken by his disciples, and even by the Father himself in the last hour. Another face is the shining one on the mount of Transfiguration, and the glorified face after the Ascension, which lights up the heavenly world, and changes all who gaze upon it into the same image. This face of Christ is not a face of one man, but a radical face, and men of all ages and all nationalities may call him brother. In the evening the subject was, "I am the good Shepherd." He drew with a master's hand the picture of the Eastern Shepherd, noble, brave, kind and tender, between whom and his flock were an intimate acquaintance and a reciprocal affection. He knew every individual, his name, and peculiarities. Jesus is like the Shepherd. 1. He individualizes each of his flock. He knows our name, our disposition, our wants, our circumstances. We stand out clear and distinct before him. 2. He leads us and feeds us. The Christian life is following Christ. His footsteps are everywhere to be seen all along life's journey. He feeds us with the bread of heaven and the water of life. 3. He defends us and folds us. He protects us from our enemies, our temptations; lays down his life for us. He leads us through storms and trials of life that a place of safety may be reached, and the results be secured. He folds us in the church on earth, and in heaven provide us with greener pastures, stiller waters, more grateful shadow beneath the tree of life, and eternal safety and rest. The sermon was one of great beauty and impressiveness, and was most happily illustrated. The Eliot choir presented a choice selection of music, including a ladies' chorus, and a quartette sung by Mr. Smith, Mr. Marsh, Mrs. Hibbard, and Mrs. Goodrich. A large audience was present morning and evening, notwithstanding the rain.

Were we promised the final official scores of the N. H. S. L. T. C. spring tournament, but for some unknown reason they have failed to appear, so that we shall be compelled to delay publishing them until next week. The winners were, in the son street, have gone to Clifton, Beach Bluff, to spend the summer.

—Mr. C. B. Lancaster has hired Mr.
Pfaff's yacht, the Adrienne, during the latter's absence in Europe.

—The Sunday Herald said "Young Porter of Newton has got the right stuff for a fine rider."

—Charley Havens of this city says that he will not take part in any bicycle races, this year.

—Letters of administration have been granted in the county probate court, on the estate of David Elliot of this city.

—A large number of Newton people attended the Wellesley commencement exercises on Tuesday.

—Miss Mary C. Latta of this city is one of the graduates at the Framingham Normal School, which closes next Wednesday.

—A vesper service of song, with a Bible reading and a sermon on Friendship, will be given at the Methodist church next Sunday evening at 7.30. Sermon by the pastor, Rev. F. Nichols.

—Alderman S. L. and Mrs. Powers celebrated the eighth anniversary of their marriage Monday night, by a piazza party at their residence on Waverley avenue. The guests comprised only intimate friends from the neighborhood, but the party was a very pleasant affair.

—The annual convention of the American Bankers' Association will be held in Horticultural hall, Boston, Aug. 11 and 12.
Every banking firm, state, national and savings bank and trust company in the United States is entitled to send one delegate.

—Miss Fannie Adams of Nonantum Vale gave a progressive euchre party last Friday night, for her guests, the Misses Graham of Philadelphia. There were five tables, and the prizes were won by Mrs. E.
W. Cate, Miss Brown of Allston and Mr.
Chelius.

—E. P. Burnham has decided to enter the racing field again this year, and is having a racing bicycle and tricycle made for him. This will insure spirited contests at whatever races Mr. Burnham enters, and he will probably appear against the English riders at some of the important contests.

—William Murphy, 25 years of age, while crossing the railroad track at Washington street, Tuesday evening, stepped one side to avoid a train, and was struck in the arm by another train. His right forearm was fractured, and he was severely bruised about the head and shoulders. He was taken to the Massachusetts General Hospital.

—The general committee of arrangements for the second annual mass temperance convention of Worcester and Middlesex counties will be held at Clinton, June 30th, to choose a finance and executive committee, and choose the time and place of holding the convention. Each town and city in the two counties is requested to send a delegate.

—An attempt was made Friday night to fire a barn on the Claffin estate, Hunnewell avenue. A pile of hay was thrown into the cellar, and lighted matches thrown upon it. The hay was too green to burn, and was only scorched in places. A few days before another attempt was made to fire the barn by setting fire to a pile of matting. It is supposed to be the work of boys, and the police are looking after the culprits.

—Efforts have for sometime past been made by bicyclists and tricyclists to climb Palfrey hill in Watertown. The feat has been accomplished on the concrete walk, but never in the centre of the street, which is rough and full of rocks. On Sunday, however, a Watertown gentleman succeeded with a new kind of a wooden wheel tricycle in getting to the top, three or four of his friends witnessing the accomplishment of the feat, which had before been regarded as impossible.

—W. W. Carruth, formerly judge of the police court in this city, was arraigned in Boston on Wednesday on an indictment, charging him with the embezzlement of $7,783, while an administrator of the estate of Julia F. Ward of Oakland, Cal. Mr.
Carruth has for sometime been a resident of Washington. He pleaded not guilty, and was ordered to recognize in the sum of $10,000 for trial. It is not believed here that Mr. Carruth can be guilty.

—Umbrellas and trunks repaired at H.
Jordan's, Bacon street, Newton.

where they will pass the summer.

—Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hall of Washington street sail from New York, July 2nd, on a Bremen line steamer, for Europe, and will be absent two months.

—There are now five patients at the Cottage Hospital, and this is only the third week it has been in operation. This proves how much it was needed here.

—Dr. and Mrs. E. W. Jones have returned to the Hotel Hunnewell from their two months' visit to California. They were in the Raymond party that arrived in Boston last Saturday.

—The new time table of the Fitchburg Railroad went into effect on Monday, and is printed in another column. The principal changes are on the Sunday trains, to which there are several additions.

Brockton and Capt. Holmes of No. 4 Engine, Jersey City, have been the guests of the fire department the past week. Chief Bixby escorted the visitors about the city.

—The first open air service of the Newton Y. M. C. A. was held last Sunday, and the attendance was quite large. Rev. H.
L. Hastings of Boston preached on the text: "He gave himself a ransom for many." It was a very effective discourse. Another meeting will be held Sunday, at 4 p. m., and all are invited.

—The Jersey Stock Club met at the residence of Mr. John S. Farlow on Waverley avenue, Thursday afternoon and evening.
It was what was called "ladies' day" by the club, and no business was transacted.
It was the intention to have the exercises on the lawn but the weather prevented.

—The marriage of Miss Cora F. Burr to Mr. Henry W. Harden of New York city took place Thursday afternoon at the residence of the bride's father, Mr. L. T. Burr, on Park street. The wedding was a quiet friends being present. Rev. Mr. Horn-brooke officiated.

—Rev. Dr. Shinn left Newton on Monday in company with Rev. Mr. Metcalf, and sailed from New York Tuesday morning on the Alaska. On reaching Liverpool, Rev.
Mr. Metcalf will start on a tour through Sweden and Norway, and Dr. Shinn will be joined by Mr. E. M. Springer, and go to Edinburgh. They will make a tour of Scotland and England, and then go to the continent, where they will make short visits to Paris, Antwerp, Berlin, sail up the Rhine, and travel about until the first of September, when they return home.

—Miss Spear's school held its annual closing exercises at the old Baptist church building on Washington street, Wednesday afternoon. There was a large attendance of the friends of the scholars, and much praise was given for the proficiency displayed. The exercises consisted of singing by the school, physical exercises by the elocution class, a French play in which the pupils acquitted themselves with credit, a children's play in two scenes, essays by Miss E. M. Hale, E. G. Parker, Miss H. F.
Hall, and Miss L. I. Curry; recitations and declamations by Miss L. I. Curry, J. F.
Crosby, Miss K. Sumner, Harold Hutchinson, Miss A. Williams, and a German recitation by E. G. Parker. The school has had a very successful year.

—Messrs. Barnes, Robinson and Thayer have removed their fences on Channing street, and graded and otherwise improved their front yards, so that the street is now one of the most attractive in the city. A correspondent has asked why so much money was spent on the street, which is not a main thoroughfare, when it was repaired at great expense only two or three years ago. The explanation should be sought from the highway committee, who probably had some good reason for their action.

—The 41st anniversary of the Eliot Sabbath School was held last Sunday evening, and the exercises were very interesting.
The program consisted of an anthem,
"Hail the festal day;" reading of the Scriptures; hymn, "Our Anniversary Day;"
offertoire; hymn, "Forth to the fight; report of the superintendent, Mr. Henry E.
Cobb; solo, "Consider the lilies;" address,

by Prof. G. B. Wilcox, D. D., of Chicago; anthem, "Let hill and lofty mountain;"
address, by Rev. G. H. Gould; hymn, "We work all together," and the benediction.
The report of the superintendent showed that the school had had a prosperous year.

land, O., on an extended visit.

—Mr. Joseph Russell and family are spending a few days at the Shirley house, Ocean Spray, Winthrop.

5th page.

—James W. Dorney and James Sullivan of this city graduated at the Boston College, Thursday night, and the latter gave an essay upon "Progress—Its importance."

—It has been decided to retain the post office in its present location, but to take nearly half of the store it occupies. As it is in the most convenient place, the decision will give general satisfaction.

—The Baptist Sunday School will observe its 27th anniversary Sunday evening, at 7 o'clock. Readings, Recitations and addresses, with singing by the children, will make the hour an interesting one to all who may attend.

—E. P. Burnham heads the list as a strawberry picker, as well as a cyclist. He was passing Mrs. Goddard's residence on Waverley avenue the other day, when the gardener called him in to see the berries men were picking. In order to show them how, Mr. Burnham took a quart basket and filled it in 54 seconds.

—Waban Lodge, No. 146, I. O. O. F., elected the following officers at its meeting Thursday night: N. G., Geo. O. Brock; V.
G., F. C. Morgan; Sec., Geo. L. Hawthorne; Per. Sec., A. W. Boulton; Treas., L. D.
Boise. These officers will be installed next Thursday evening at a public meeting, when the appointed officers will be announced, and the ceremonies will be followed by a banquet.

—The first Field Day of the Newton Natural History Society was a complete success. The day was as perfect as a perfect June day can be. The party numbered about eighty, and thoroughly enjoyed their three hours' ramble around the shores of Hammond's Pond and through the beautiful forest. Then the company gathered in the amphitheatre, almost a room formed by a ledge and huge fragments of conglom-erate, and listened to a short geological description of the formation of the rocks, by Dr. J. F. Frisbie. About 6 o'clock the party returned to the Chestnut Hill station, and took the cars to their various homes,
well pleased with the afternoon "outing."

—The fair of the Church of Our Lady will close next week Saturday night. Last Sunday it was announced that $4,000 had been raised, and it is hoped to double that sum.
Considerable amusement has been caused this week by a spirited contest for a billy and an engraving between Officers Davis of Nonantum, Harrison of Lower Falls, Henthorne of Newton, and Davis of Newton-ville. Voting has also been brisk upon two members of the fire department, Foreman Graves of the Graphic and of Steamer No. 1, and Foreman Higgins of Truck
No. 1, Newtonville. The prize is a handsome oil painting.

Withdraws From the League.

The Nonantum Bicycle Club held their regular monthly meeting Monday evening, and voted to withdraw from the League of American Wheelmen, as a club. It was also voted to reinstate the suspended members, Messrs. Burnham and Huntley, and to join the American Cyclists' Union. Messrs.
Geo. F. Williams and A. A. Glines were appointed delegates to represent the club at any meetings of the Union.

A committee of five were appointed to make arrangements for the parade on the Fourth, consisting of Messrs. A. Sydney
Bryant, Geo. F. Williams, Geo. S. Brazer, W. H. Allen and W. E. Wentworth. This committee will act with a committee of the Newton Club, appointed at a special meeting held in Boston Monday night. It was decided also to have races on the fifth after the breakfast at Cycle Hall and Messrs. A.
A. Glines, E. P. Burnham and A. W. Kilburn were appointed a committee to attend to the arrangements.

Base Ball Notes.

and Watertown streets, the Athletics play the Malden Grays. The Athletics will present their new battery, Roach and Monks.
At Newtonville, Saturday—Hathorns, 24; Experts, Everyday Work.

Great deeds are trumpeted, loud bells are rung,
And men turn round to see,
The high peaks echo to the peans sung
O'er some great victory.
And yet great deeds are few. The mightiest men Find opportunities but now and then.
Shall one sit idle through long days of peace,
Waiting for walls to scale?
Or lie in port until some Golden Fleece Lures him to face the gale?
There's work enough, why idly then delay?
His work counts most who labors every day.
A torrent sweeps down the mountain's brow
With foam and flash and roar,
Anon its strength is spent, where is it now?
Its one short day is o'er.
But the clear stream that through the meadow flows
All the long summer on its mission goes.
Better the steady flow; the torrent's dash
Soon leaves its rent track dry.
The light we love is not the lightning flash,
From out a midnight sky,
But the sweet sunshine, whose unfading ray
From its calm throne of blue lights every day.
The sweetest lives are those to duty wed,
Whose deeds, both great and small,
Are close-knit strands of an unbroken thread,
Where love ennobles all.
The world may sound no trumpets, ring no bells;
The Book of Life the shining record tells.

IN THE BRIGHT JUNE WEATHER.

[By Dorothy Lundt in the Woman's Journal.]

Thomas Endicott, Harvard undergraduate, senior, and player of the first cornet in the Pierian Sodality, walked briskly up to a certain doorway in the dingy and not over-reputable West End street. To the side of the doorway he sought, was tacked a weather beaten sign, informing the public at large that Herr Jacob Dienenmuller, dwelling within, was prepared to instruct the youth of his generation in the art of fencing, and also in the use of the flute and cornet. Among the instruments in whose use Herr Dienenmuller might have instructed his pupils, being uncommonly proficient in the same himself, was a meerschaum pipe with a bowl large enough to serve for an Olympian drinking cup; and why Herr Dienenmuller and his pipe were not visible, as was their invariable wont these bright June afternoons, at the little red-draped window in the fourth story, puzzled young Endicott, as he glanced up at that familiar eery before pulling the bell. He was reassured, however, as to his instructor's continued existence and measurable well-being, by finding, as he went up the rickety staircase two steps at a time, that the cloud of tobacco-smoke, always dense in this Teutonic abode, grew perceptibly thicker and more pungent as he approached the fourth story. He rapped upon the half-closed door, but instead of the gruffly cheerful "Herein!" which usually followed his knock, he was amazed to hear himself greeted by a tempest of German invective—sudden, vociferous, comprehensive. He had more than once, the preceding winter, roused his irascible master to frenzy by his clumsiness at carte and at tierce; so that he was not without a clue to the general character of the observations with which he found himself saluted.

"If it be thou, heaven-forsaken swine of a doctor," concluded the invisible obstructor, suddenly dropping into very comprehensive English, "get thee to the everlasting burning doom, and me no more make miserable!"

Herr Dienenmuller justly prided himself on his pronunciation of the English language; but the construction of his sentences was left largely to the inspiration of the moment. Endicott recovered his breath, and pushed the door wide. His first observation was that Fritz, the stout and elderly hound, usually only less cherished by his master than the meerschaum pipe itself, was lying dejectedly, his tail between his legs, in the corner farthest from the bed; while the volcanic margin of books, brushes and other minor projectiles with which he was surrounded seemed to suggest that recent demonstrations of affection on his part had not been cordially received. The probable projector of these missiles lay, in a Grandfather Smallweed kind of collapse, on his bier-like iron bed; while from out of the shapeless mass, like the smoke-stack of a steamer after a collision, rose the unextinguishable meerschaum. On hearing a step in the room, a grizzled head with wrathful eyes suddenly rose out of the tumbled bed clothes, and, on recognizing Endicott, as suddenly dropped again, with a grunt half of discomfort, half of relief.

"Ach so!" said the owner of the grizzled head. "It is not, then, the never-to-be-heard-of-cursed doctor come back! Be he everlastingly verd!"—he began; but Endicott met the breaking wave of invective with a quiet interruption of cheerful words.

"Oh, come now," he said, "that unlucky doctor may be an awfully bad lot, and all that, but he can't be wholly responsible for this—this horrid mess!" concluded the young man, in frank allusion to the dismal scene around him. "Now, what is the trouble, anyway? You don't look much like a fencing-lesson, Herr Meister, that's a fact!" he said; and there was much more sympathy in his voice than in his blundering words. He bent, somewhat awkwardly, to smooth one of the much-doubled-up pillows. "What in the universe is the matter?" he asked again.

"It was the back!" came, in a hoarse growl, from somewhere behind the meerschaum. "My back no more skin has than if I an Inquisition martyr were; and therefore neither can I sit nor lie, unless upon my stomach it be!" said Herr Dienenmuller with emphasis of despair. Endicott felt a sudden twitching at the corners of his mouth, but reflected with satisfaction that his mustache was probably long enough to hide this indiscretion. He threw out from the least-burdened chair a beer-mug, two foils, and a much-thumbed copy of Heine, and drew it to the side of the bed. In his sympathetic society, the sufferer grew communicative. It appeared that, according to his own statement, he had awaked that morning with "the devil doubling him up."

"Lumbago?" said the young man to himself; "or colic, perhaps? Ah it was his back, he said. Lumbago."

Being wholly unable to move, he had allowed himself to be persuaded into sending for a doctor. At this point Herr Dienenmuller's conversation, if reproduced, would require a reckless use of dashes and exclamation points. The doctor had ordered a generous-sized mustard plaster to be applied locally, and knowing nothing of the peculiar powers of the application, the patient had mixed and spread it with a liberal hand. In the momentary relief which followed, he had fallen soundly asleep. When he awoke, "Ach!" he said, "I was in water at the boil!"

Endicott was forced to admit that the sufferer had good cause of lamentation, and that the serpentine mode of progress to which he had referred seemed really the only one open to him.

"But the pain you had this morning—that at least is gone, is it not?" said Endicott.

His master glared at him a moment in speechless contempt, and then, "Donnerwetter!" roared he, "And will a man a back-ache remember, when he skinless alive finds himself?" From which his pupil justly inferred that the treatment though heroic, had been efficacious.

"Well, now, cheer up, Herr Meister!" he said, essaying consolation; and then with that philosophy of which we are all masters when the ills of others are in question, he began to point out in how few days nature would remedy present painful deficits. "And I don't mind missing my lesson, in the least!" he assured Herr Dienenmuller.

He soon perceived that whatever was weighing on his master's mind, it was certainly not the failure to meet his lesson. "For you will never fencing learn, and what does one lesson matter, more or less?" he asked peevishly. Presently the real cause of distress revealed itself. It seemed that Herr Dienenmuller was at once the honored leader and the first cornet in what may be called a nocturnal German band. There were also Pfeiffer, the baker ("he can no more the clarinet play than one of his home-baked pretzels"), said Pfeiffer's fellow-musician parenthetically, and Steiner, the bird-fancier, and half-a-dozen other "good men and true," who, at the close of the laborious day, were glad enough to pour out their souls in music, refresh their bodies by an hour of leisurely wandering, and pick up the few pennies which would add a mug of beer to the morrow's frugal dinner. And what was to become of the band to-night, vainly waiting at their place of rendezvous for their leader and his cornet? The early martyrs might have borne being flayed alive with more equanimity than did Herr Dienenmuller; but even they would hardly have been equal to playing the cornet immediately after that unpleasant operation.

"And where will the ten cents to-morrow be, to buy the fruit for Johann Rausch's lame Gretchen? And what would the 'Sweet By-and-By,' without the cornet flinging out his hands with an impatient groan. Endicott had been listening half-sympathetically, half amusedly; and just then a twinkling light was coming up into his pleasant hazel eyes. His sister Meg, far away on the Mediterranean with her sailor husband, would have recognized that twinkle. It had been her danger-signal many a time in those old days when her mischievous younger brother was at once her terror and her delight.

"Herr Meister," he said, "now, did you ever hear me play the cornet?" and in face of the old man's incredulity, he opened the dusty case that lay conveniently near at hand. After a moment he began to play that serenade that had aroused such enthusiasm at the glee-club concert; and as he listened, the master's grizzled brows unbent, and there was a visible relaxation of the grim lines about his mouth.

"That is not so bad!" cried he, when it was finished, "not so bad, Jungling! And why then, son of stupidity, hast thou not been my pupil in this, rather than the fencing, in which thou art of the clumsiest?"

Endicott laughed and flushed a little, not ill pleased with the gruff praise. He seized the lucky moment, feeling that his whimsical purpose was already half-gained.

"Herr Meister," he said, "I've been trying all day to think up some sort of a lark for to-night, and now here's one ready made! Let me take your place in the band to-night; come now! why not? I'm not exactly up on the 'Sweet By-and-By,' to be sure, but I think I could manage it at sight, and most street performances are a sort of public rehearsal, anyway, aren't they? I'm sure that talking with Steiner and Rausch would get me up quite as well for that blessed examination in German Seven as grinding Schiller all by myself; and it would be so much more amusing!" the young fellow said.

How true some of these old sayings are. A friend of mine paid a travelling quack $50 to cure him of Scrofula, from which he had suffered two years. He gave him a bottle of stuff which only aggravated the disease. When he went to consult him the second time, the quack had left for parts unknown. Upon learning the circumstances I recommended Sulphur Bitters. Five bottles cured him.—Editor Journal and Courier.

before temptation came, and disgrace and exile.

"Well, but the players of the street do not the laundry-cared-for-linen wear," he said, in grim remonstrance; "neither are their coat and trousers of one cloth made!"

But Endicott said that no such trivial objection should stand in his way, and spying a voluminous cloak in an obscure corner, and near it a hat, such as only strolling players and stage villains know the secret of, he made of himself in a moment such a respectable figure as would pass without comment in the most Bohemian haunt in the world. He must fortify himself for his evening's work with some sort of Teutonic inspiration, he declared presently; and he made an excursion to the corner restaurant and fetched thence a noble supply of sausage, sauerkraut, and cheese. Of these he partook, in the excellent fellowship of Herr Dienenmuller and Fritz—the latter now restored to the seventh canine heaven of happiness by his master's approving notice. A pleasant little wind came in through the red-draped window; there was a sweet homely odor of mignonette from the cracked flower-pot on the sill. Down in the room beneath, the blind canary felt the slanting sun warm on his ruffled feathers, and began to pipe a shrill, merry little song.

"I haven't had such a good time since I was a boy!" Endicott said, and for the moment he felt it to be quite true. It was a boyish sort of chatter that he kept up, when the little feast being over, he busied himself with a philanthropic endeavor to make the room look a little more like a human habitation, and a little less like "the greatest show on earth," as he mercilessly said. Perhaps his touch was more deft than one might expect in one of his muscles and inches; for there was a something in it brought from the old childish days when he had learned quiet movements and helpful ways in his mother's patient sick-room.

"Do you know," he was saying, as he paused in front of the bed with a stuffed owl in one hand, and a battered candlestick in the other. "I've often thought that if I played in a street-band, I would do the foxy thing by adapting my music to the neighborhood I was playing in? In those jolly old streets down by the hospital, for instance, where they have brass knockers, and the door-steps look as if they were holy-stoned three times a day, as Jack would say, I'd give them the old-fashioned tunes—'Annie Laurie,' you know, and 'The Last Rose of Summer,' and 'Auld Lang Syne.' And up at the other end of the city, where the swell-front houses, are and the parks where they have to plant the trees over again every year—for them I'd practice up 'Pinafore' and all the new polkas. And I'd do Offenbach and some serenades on the swell avenues; and the 'Sweet-By-and-By,' and 'What Shall the Harvest Be?' I'd save for the prim side-streets where the names on the door-plates look as if they ought to have 'Deacon in Israel' printed after them. Ah, Herr Meister! It takes a philosopher and reader of human nature to succeed in these artistic pursuits!" the young man cried. "Wait until I bring you back an independent fortune from the results of my finesse?"

"It is something of human nature you have yet to learn!" the old man observed with a grim chuckle. "And what if it were the prim streets that did well appreciate Offenbach? And what if it were the great and rich avenues that paid best for 'Auld Lang Syne,' and 'Annie Laurie,' ja wohl! and listened to them, too, through Pfeiffer ever two notes behind is?" he said.

A little later, Endicott, in his absurdly melodramatic attire, was standing, cornet in hand, in the doorway. "I'm sure you want me to come back to-night with the cornet and the independent fortune, do you not?" he was saying. "Well, it won't be very early; for I must be at Harvard for a half-hour or so, by-and-by, but it won't be much after ten, I think. But I don't believe you ever stop smoking long enough, Herr Meister, to go to bed like civilized people; so it won't matter so much when I appear. Auf wiedersehen! And won't you wish me a fine adventure of some sort? I am sure that is the least you can do!"

As he looked back, through the shadowy room, he wondered that he had never noticed before how bright and kind the blue eyes were, under their shaggy brows.

"Adventure!" Herr Dienenmuller said, "and is it not of itself an adventure to have out one-and-twenty years of age? Ah! But I would ask no better adventure than so. Auf wiedersehen, Jungling, and look that you bring no disgrace to the cornet of an honest man!"

Karen Reid stood by the kitchen window, looking absently out into the fading light. The immediate landscape was not of the cheerfullest; being a sun-baked city yard with a crouching cat or two upon the shabby fence by way of architectural adornment. But beyond the yard, just across the passage-way which connected street with street, there was a pretty and pleasant.

A Fool and His Money Soon Part.

How true some of these old sayings are. A friend of mine paid a travelling quack $50 to cure him of Scrofula, from which he had suffered two years. He gave him a bottle of stuff which only aggravated the disease. When he went to consult him the second time, the quack had left for parts unknown. Upon learning the circumstances I recommended Sulphur Bitters. Five bottles cured him.—Editor Journal and Courier.

Allen's Pond. Second Season.

THE SEASON OF 1886 WILL OPEN JUNE 7. AFTERNOONS ONLY, EXCEPTING SATURDAYS, TILL JUNE 23.

This pond is the enlargement of the pure and never failing "Cheese Cake," near its source. It is secluded, fenced in and supplied with dressing rooms, swimming-post, spring-board, etc. The number of dressing rooms has been doubled, and the depth of the water increased six inches. Arrangements have been made by which the water can be drawn from the bottom during the day, thus raising the temperature several degrees. The sheet of water—5,000 square feet—is divided by a floating boom into two parts for safety, and is from 6 inches to 5½ feet in depth. The record of the last season shows that this pond meets a real want as yet unsupplied by our city, many of both sexes learning to swim therein. The hours assigned to women have been doubled, and swimming lessons for both sexes will be given in the most approved methods. Bathers will wear tight suits and provide their own towels. Suits and towels, if marked, can be left in care of the attendants, for which a small charge will be made. Strangers may similarly be furnished with towels, etc.

WALTER THORP,
NEWTON CENTRE.

The simplest and best awning ever made. It need not be removed to close the blinds; can be put on or removed in one minute by any one from the inside. It presents no folds to catch the rain or dust, and therefore is very durable. The awning can be attached to the window any distance from the top, so as to give a passage of air over it. It can be opened at either side, or both, to give an increased circulation of air. In case of removal, can, at slight expense, be made to fit any window. No carpenter needed, spring or fall. It costs no more than any other style of awning, much less than most.

Highest medal awarded at the late New Orleans Exposition. Direct to

LASELL'S COMMENCEMENT.

THE ADDRESS BY MRS. PARKER TO THE GRADUATES.

Following is the address to the graduates of the class of 1886, at Lasell Seminary, and the memorial to Mr. Josiah Lasell, read by Mrs. Isabel Jennings Parker, at the reunion of the Alumnae Association. The poem by Mrs. Reed, on "Rebecca Perley Page" read by Emily F. Woodward Potter, will be found on another page.

ADDRESS TO THE GRADUATES OF 1886.
I have just a word to say to the class graduating to-day. Your number is ten. Thirty years ago a class of the same number was graduated here. Dear young ladies, you must pardon me for saying that when you shall look back thirty years from to-day, and it will not seem very long, believe me, you may be proud if you have thirty years of such usefulness and loveliness, as we see in the record of those ten splendid girls.

And in proportion to your higher advantages, and for greater facilities for all kinds of improvement, so ought you to be better, braver and nobler women. This we expect of you. And among the good, brave and noble things you mean to do, do not forget your duty to this Association. Come to our reunions. Respond cheerfully to any request for your services here and thus do credit to your excellent training. I bid you welcome and goodbye, which means as you know, God be with you!

IN MEMORIAM.

JOSIAH LASELL.

I am to offer some brief memorial of our most beloved and honored teacher, whose recent death makes this day sad with a new sadness for some of us.

It is most fitting that we remember him here, where he passed many years of his early manhood, where he proved his rare gifts as a teacher, where he won his young pupils as a member of the first graduating class, from whose side he was taken a few weeks ago, so suddenly that it was to him a translation.

We who were his pupils need not be told of his virtues, his gifts, his goodness. They are written in our hearts, not to be erased.

In the dear old days when we were studying here, there was much to make us happy. And no students ever had more zealous and earnest help in their struggles toward intellectual and moral excellence, than we received from our two teachers, Mr. Briggs and Mr. Lasell, as we called them when titles were less freely used than now. A score of titles would not express our loving reverence for them both. We can hardly speak of one without the other, so united are they in our memory. Though unlike, they were singularly suited to each other; the one full of enthusiasm for mathematical and natural science, the other equally zealous in classical and metaphysical study; the one constantly filling our minds with knowledge from the perennial fountain of his own well-stored brain; the other teaching as how to arrange that knowledge, and make it useful. The one taught us to solve difficult problems, the other trained us to reason correctly. The one was noble-hearted, large-minded, generous to a fault, the other, no less noble and generous, was far more exalting.

Is there not some Alumna present, who remembers one of the occasions when we came from recitation with red eyes, which Mr. Briggs quickly noticing, assumed an air of mock resignation, saying, "There, Jo has been giving his class a lecture. Now I shall have no lessons for a week." Each seemed the complement of the other, and the course of instruction would have been incomplete with either one alone. After his colleague removed, the Senior Principal was like a bird with one wing.

But, O, sisters of those by-gone days, shall we ever forget the kind and watchful care they together gave us? The wise and thoughtful discipline so lovingly administered, the unfailing approval, or the just rebuke which our conduct merited, showing us constantly how we were surrounded with their watchful care at every step? Looking backward as we do to-day over so many, many years, do we not remember more gratefully than ever, how much we owe to those two dear instructors whose voices we shall no more hear?

And when class by class, year by year, we passed our severe examination on this platform and received our diplomas, did we not feel that, go where we would, their benediction would follow us?

Just here, let me read an extract from a poem read on our twentieth Anniversary, by my class-mate and your President, Mrs. Sampson, referring to our chagrin on being discovered in some iniquity.

"For so deeply we revered him,
That his slightest word or look,
Woke contrition in each bosom,
Sent the boldest to her book,

For to us the incarnation
Of all that's wise, he seemed,
And to strive for his ideal,
Too hard, no labor deemed.
Gladly now, with riper judgment
To that mind so clear and keen,
We renew the loving homage,
Rendered them at sweet sixteen.

At the first meeting of this association, Mr. Lasell was with us and we heard from his lips something of the last days of his fellow-principal.

And to-day we look upon his completed life. On Sunday evening he joined heartily with his sweet, strong voice, in the praises of the Lord's house evening service, and went home and wrote a long, kind letter to his nephew, George Lasell Briggs, and retired to rest, and early on Monday morning he entered into the rest of Paradise. His eager, earnest soul passed onward to the new life with no interval of illness and pain. For this we may be thankful, and for all his noble, gentle deeds and words. Though he had numbered three score years, yet he went to his grave in all his glorious prime; in full activity of zeal and power. A Christian cannot die before his time. The Lord's appointment is the servant's hour.

Field Day of the West Newton Women's Educational Club.

A lovely morning and a pleasant drive through Auburndale, Weston, Wayland and Sudbury, leaving West Newton station at 8.45, and arriving at the Wayside Inn about 11.30. Here we alighted and rested in the shade of a beautiful old elm tree across the road, one of whose wide-spreading branches afforded ample protection for our party of thirty-six. Our president read to us selections from Longfellow's "Tales of a Wayside Inn," and showed us the coat of arms of the Howe family, in whose possession the inn remained for more than one hundred and fifty years, the last members being Adam and Lyman Howe, two bachelor brothers who lived there together for many years, the old housekeeper, aged ninety, speaking of them affectionately as her "boys." Upon the death of the surviving brother, the household goods were sold at auction and scattered far and wide, so that none of the old furniture now remains in the old house. The coat of arms is thus described in the poem,—

He beareth gules upon his shield,
A chevron argent in the field,
With three wolves' heads, and for a crest
A Wyvern par-pale adressed,
Upon a helmet barred; below
The scroll reads: "By the name of Howe."
"The jovial rhymes that still remain,
Writ near a century ago
By the great Major Molineaux" were framed in order to preserve them, and the fragile glass remains intact, long after the hand which traced the letters has crumbled into dust.

The "Student of the books and days,
To whom all tongues and lands were known,
And yet a lover of his own."

was Henry Ware Wales of Cambridge. The "Theologian from the School of Cambridge on the Charles" was the Rumford Professor at Harvard, a scientific man, whose taste for discussing Theology and Metaphysics had occasioned this title.

"A poet, too, was there, whose verse
Was tender, musical and terse.

This was Theophilus Parsons; and the musician

Fair-haired, blue-eyed, his aspect blithe,
His figure tall and straight and lithe,
And every feature of his face Revealing his Norwegian race, was the world-renowned Ole Bull. It is not known whether Longfellow ever visited the Inn, but, knowing that the persons mentioned were in the habit of meeting there, he has drawn largely upon his imagination for things said and done, and embellished the facts with pictures from his own fancy. After these pleasant reunions were given up, the "poet" wrote the following lines,—

"Thunder storms may roll above him,
And the bolt may rend the oak,
Lyman lieth where no longer
He shall dread the lightning's stroke.

Never to his father's hostel
Comes a kinsman or a guest,
Midnight calls for no more candles,
House and landlord both have rest.

Adam's love and Adam's trouble*
Are a scarce remembered tale,
No more wine cups brim, uly bubble,
No more healths, nor cakes, nor ale.

On the broken hearth a stranger
Sits and fancies foolish things,
And the poet weaves romances,
Which the maiden fondly sings.

All about the ancient hostel,
And its legends and its oaks,
And the quaint old bachelor brothers
And their minstrelsy and jokes.

No man knows them any longer;
All are gone, and I remain;
Reading as 'twere my epitaph
In the rainbow-painted pane.

Blessings on them, dear initials!
Henry W.—Daniel T.—
E.—and L.—I'll not interpret;
Let men wonder who they be.

Some are in their graves, and many Buried in their books and care
In the tropics, in archangel,
Our thoughts are no longer there.

God have mercy! all are sinful;
Christ conform our lives to them!
Keep us from all strife, ill speaking,
Envy, and the curse of wine!

Fetch my steed, I cannot linger,
Buckley, quick, I must away!
Good old groom, take thou this shilling!
Millions would not make me stay."

* He lost his affianced just before they were to be married.
† Buckley was an old servant at the inn.

After an hour thus pleasantly passed in hearing about the good old times at the Inn, we sat down to an appetizing lunch spread in the parlor, whose walls had so often echoed sounds of mirth, and under the superintendence of our jovial Aunt A., feasted as merrily as did those who preceded us. The old walls again rang with laughter, and flashes of wit scintillated under the influence of hot coffee and lemonade, and our dessert of chestnuts; though our tales were neither "of arms nor love," "pleasant were they and full of color."

Questions in metaphysics and natural history were asked and solved—nearly the whole brute creation being discussed, even his Satanic Majesty himself. Under the guidance of our kind hostess, we rambled over the queer old house, peered curiously at the old fashioned paper on the walls put on in squares, and hand-printed in quaint designs, scanned the worn tracery upon the painted floor, now so neatly effaced that we could but guess that it once matched the pattern on the wall, wondered at the close den in the garret, where the darkey slave was confined. The little wooden bunk in which he slept would be scorned by the free born autocrats of the present domestic regime.

The old bar still remains standing, in what was formerly the office of the Inn. A strong wooden bulk-head, as high as a man's shoulders, built into one corner, with a latticed front which could be swung back, disclosing shelves probably well filled in the days when everyone, even clergymen, took a glass of toddy. At one end is a door cut in halves, the upper half standing hospitably open to tempt the thirsty traveller. Near the house is a giant oak, and six fair woman at one time ensconced themselves within its hollow trunk.

Reluctantly we said good-bye to the old Inn and its pleasant surroundings, and driving home by another road passed the former home of L. Maria Child. The house has been recently remodelled, having been sold after the death of herself and husband, the proceeds being distributed among the poor of the town, according to a provision in their will. On reaching West Newton station we separated, each taking up her line of march for home, and though somewhat tired and dusty, thoroughly delighted with our visit to the Wayside Inn at Sudbury.

The "Fresh Air Fund," Boston, has entered upon its seventh season of benevolent work. The expenditure of five dollars gives a ride into the suburbs of the city to one hundred persons; ten dollars enables thirty-three persons to enjoy a sail to Nantasket Beach, and twenty-five dollars conveys one hundred persons to Franklin Park and provides for them an abundant dinner. All who desire to have a share in this charity, which brings so much refreshment to poor and feeble mothers and their children, who would not otherwise enjoy a day in the country or at the seashore, are requested to send their donation to —Little Effie, three years old, went to a strange city with her mamma, to visit her uncle, and the next morning was occupied in flattening her nose against the window pane and satisfying her childish curiosity by gazing at the unusual scenes. "Oh, auntie! do see that awful homely man!" "Hush, child. That is Mr. Lord, the mayor. You must not talk that way. He is a very nice man." "Mister Lord?" and the nose presses tighter against the glass, while Effie watches him clear out of sight. "My!" with a toss of her little head, "I know he never made me."—[Lynn Union.

MR. SALTONSTALL'S DENIAL.

Collector Saltonstall denies the statement that Custom House appointees are appointed from among those applicants who have the strongest party backing, and he assures Secretary James P. Tolman, of the Newton Civil Service Reform Association, that the views he had before accepting office remain unshaken, "and that my official actions will be guided by them."

Mr. Saltonstall is an officer of the Newton Association, and his zeal as a reformer before he was an official makes this explanation from him especially desirable. If such a man as Mr. Saltonstall should prove untrue to his professions, the chance of any real reform in the civil service is small indeed.

We see no reason to doubt Collector Saltonstall's statements. He occupies a very trying position, and all his official actions are criticised in no friendly way by his political opponents, and the truth distorted, if not worse. He says that the five Democratic inspectors, who have lately secured positions, were appointed without regard to, and in most cases without knowledge of their political views. "If many, or the majority of them were Democrats, it was probably because it is doubtless true that since I have held this office, the vast majority of applicants for admission to the service have been Democrats." If this explanation is not accepted, probably none that the Collector could make would be. Republicans have had so much experience of unfair treatment of public officials by the opposition press, that they should set a better example now that the tables are turned, and be cautious about making use of misstatements and perversions of the truth.

Public officials should be treated fairly, although it is a good thing to let them know that their acts are subjected to a rigid scrutiny. Collector Saltonstall's explicit denial, over his own signature, of the dishonorable action imputed to him, should certainly have more weight than the statement of a nameless reporter, and his letter will prove satisfactory to his associates in the Newton Civil Service Reform Association, and to his fellow citizens in Newton.

MIDDLESEX County, by the new re-districting bill reported in the Senate, is to have seven senatorial districts, exclusive of the third ward of Cambridge, which is added to Suffolk county. The first district contains Arlington, Medford, Somerville and Winchester; the second, Belmont, Concord, Lexington, Lincoln, Newton, Waltham and Watertown. The third embraces the whole of Cambridge except Ward 3. The fourth and fifth are in the western part of the county. The sixth takes in Everett, Malden, Melrose, North Reading, Reading, Stoneham, Wakefield and Wilmington. The seventh district is made up of the city of Lowell. The Democrats on the committee dissented from the report, and evidently the bill is to be fought over on strict party lines.

THE Massachusetts magazine for June contains a biographical sketch of Col. Albert A. Pope, written by John N. McClintock, and a fine portrait. The people of Newton, with whom Col. Pope lived so long, do not need to be told of the remarkable success he has achieved by his indomitable energy and perseverance. Beginning life as a poor boy, he has illustrated what industry and business enterprise can accomplish, and his life has been one steady progress upward. The article is an extremely interesting one, as it gives Col. Pope's early struggles, his valiant services in the war of the Rebellion, and the rise to success of the Pope Manufacturing Company, one of the most flourishing and best organized corporations in the country. The magazine also gives a sketch of Col. Pope's Newton residence.

GOVERNOR Robinson has again proved that he is the right man for the place, by his veto of the Tobin bill. His arguments are unanswerable, and we know a number of old soldiers who feel grateful to him for saving the veterans from the imputation of being "unregenerate spoilsmen." If the General Assembly wishes to save any portion of its reputation, it should adjourn at once.

SENATOR WARNER MILLER of New York addressed the students of Union College upon the "Duties of educated men to the Republic," and after urging his hearers to join some political party, he told them that

"Bolting was a betrayal of principle," and was dishonorable. This statement is from the politician's standpoint, and its frankness certainly is commendable.

THE handsome Cambridge hospital, just completed, and for which the generous sum of $110,000 was contributed by citizens of Cambridge, only contains three free beds. The Newton Hospital is ahead of that and only cost about one-tenth as much.

A BILL to incorporate the Newton street Railway Company has been reported in the senate, and possibly the younger residents of this city may live to see the road in operation.

THE more worthless a man is the more salary he wants, seems to be true of the friends of the "salary steal" bill now before the General Assembly.

THE Newton Civil Service Reform Association has sent a letter to Gov. Robinson, thanking him for his veto of the Tobin bill.

Needs of the Cottage Hospital.

To the Editor of the Graphic:

Please call the attention of the people of Newton to the fact that the Hospital Building Committee need $2500 to pay for the plumbing and steam-heating apparatus put into the new building.

Thus far only about fifty persons have contributed beyond ten dollars each towards the erection of the Hospital. There surely must be twenty-five others who could give one hundred dollars or more each to remove this debt, and to enable the institution to start out without the burden this is sure to be, if not met at once.

It is probable that some of our citizens have been waiting to see if the Hospital would go on before they offered any help. Perhaps the long delay in starting gave some the impression that it was a doubtful experiment.

You can say that there are five patients there now, and that application has been made for others. Six patients in two weeks! The hospital has "gone on" and expects to go on.

It is needed in Newton, and the time is near when all our citizens will be proud of it.

If any one wants to see just what the institution is, let him go up there on Saturday afternoon.

If he can draw a check for a hundred dollars or more, he will feel like doing so when he has made such a visit.

Sometimes a man hesitates when asked to contribute to a good object, lest so many others respond that his gift be not needed.

No one need hesitate in this instance, for if more than $2500 is sent to the Treasurer, the surplus can be used for the additional building which must be put up at once.

Who will be one of twenty-five to send $100 each to the Treasurer, Mr. Geo. S. Bullens, Newton?

Of course, some one may want to send more. What is to hinder? And some one may not be able to send so much. What is to stop a gift of only five dollars?

Urges the good people of Newton not to spend much of the summer thinking how the Hospital can be freed from debt, but to go right at it and square off all the bills before the 4th of July.

Yours very truly,
G. W. Shinn.

A Newton Official Complimented.

Mr. Albert S. Glover of this city, the secretary of the New England Water Works Association, received a high compliment at the convention in New Bedford last week. Ex-President Billings, at one of the social meetings, arose and tendered the thanks of the members to the secretary, for the signal ability and energy he had displayed in the duties of the office. In the two years of his services the association had grown from a membership of less than fifty to nearly 200, and a great share of the credit for this growth should be given to Mr. Glover. The most distinguished engineers in the country have joined it, and its growth has been such that it is the largest professional organization in the country, except the American Society of Civil Engineers. At the close of his speech Mr. Billings said that the members wished to testify in some substantial way to their appreciation of Mr. Glover's services, and as they had not had time to procure anything, they had concluded to let Mr. Glover select whatever he desired, and he then handed him an envelope containing a large number of gold pieces. Mr. Glover was naturally taken back at such a flattering speech, but he managed to make a suitable reply, and the money is to be invested in a handsome gold watch.

School Committee Meeting.

The School Board met Wednesday evening, and the present corps of teachers were reappointed with one exception. The place of Miss Jumper, assistant in the Hamilton School, was left vacant at the request of Mr. Hagar. Miss A. V. Pond, teacher of drawing in the High School, was given leave of absence for a year, to study in Europe, and Mrs. Emma F. Bowles will fill the position for the ensuing year. She is a well known and experienced teacher. Miss A. D. Esty and Miss L. W. Smith were appointed unassigned teachers, to act as supplies. Superintendent Emerson was re-elected. The public property committee was authorized to make changes in the Hyde and Jackson school buildings, to make more light on the third floor. A petition was received from 40 ladies of West Newton, asking for the extension of sewing to the eighth class of the Pierce School. It was decided to close the High School on the 29th of the present month, and the Grammar Schools at noon of the 30th.

Pre-historic Monuments.

Monuments are essentially commemorative of events. When we see a huge boulder poised upon a few rounded pebbles, all detached and balanced so delicately upon the top of a ledge, that a man's strength can sway the mass from side to side but not overturn it, an event is manifestly connected therewith, and by it commemorated.

To the eye of reason, something happened just there, some vast putting forth of dynamic power on a great scale, and this is left as one of the results.

There are several such monuments in the interesting region lying between Newton Centre and Chestnut Hill. "Rocking Stones," they are called, but we like to look at them as monuments, dowered with age unknown.

On Glen avenue in Newton Centre there is a pile of three immense boulders, one above another, each added boulder adding to the marvel, first, how they came there in such a position, and second, when.

These are not rocking stones, but flat masses firmly laid up, one projecting about three feet over the other beneath it, as though it had been inclined to go over, but the impelling force had been stayed, and there it rests. This little incident of force withheld, might have happened ten thousand or a hundred thousand years since,—when, is of less interest to the mind, than the unmitigated fact itself. It is the only instance in Newton where such an object happens to be on the very road side, and at a private entrance.

An intelligent laborer on the highway was asked, if he had ever thought to himself how those rocks came to be piled up in that way, and how the top one ever got up there.

"Indeed," was the reply, "I never thought of it before, and many's the time I have eaten my dinner just back of them." Well, now you are thinking of it, do you suppose they put themselves there, one on top of the other?

"Oh, no sir, that couldn't be." Then, there must have been a time, when they were not here at all?

"I suppose you are right, sir."

But a time did come, as you see, when they got here somehow, and since then they show no signs of having moved or stirred. How did they get here?

"Well, it's not for the likes of me to say, but I guess it was the giants, sir, that did it."

How much more do the best really know? The same plummet and sounding line will do for all.

"Well said Athena's wisest son, all that we know is, nothing can be known." This much however, we do know in the sure light of modern science. Moccasined feet on a tripped lightly around here a few hundred years ago, over the dry branches of the primeval forest that our forefathers cut away.

William Blaxton built his house and lived alone at Shawmut while these rocks were here just as they are now.

When Columbus was feeling his way across unknown seas; when only a few shepherds watched their flocks by the Roman Tiber; when "Resen, Accad, and Caluch" were flourishing cities "in the Land of Shinar" west up on the plains of Egypt; when the Lake dwellers were driving their stakes and the Hindus excavating and chiselling at Elephanta; when the low-browed mound builders were piling up earthworks on the Mississippi and its tributaries; and this Western half of the world was duplicating the Eastern in arts and sciences and historical records; when Atlantis, perchance, was a peopled continent; when the cave bear and the mammoth were not yet extinct; before the first man had arrived; in some pre-Adamite deluge, these identical blocks were wrenched away from some mountain range, imbedded in thick ribbed ice, upheld and floated by the receding waters to the spot where we stand.

All the work done by the race of man on this planet has been wrought since these three stones were placed in their present position.

They came thus far, and when the glacier melted away, this vertical monument remained to keep watch and ward over the ages.

As they were left, so they lie even now, and may perchance till the heavens flee away. The tempests of unknown decades of centuries have beat upon them, the air, earth and water have waged incessant warfare upon their stolid endurance. All that remains of the abrasion and wear of eons of years is the greener moss and the gayer lichen, the smile of an eternal youth, caught anew from last night's shower.

Astounding facts are these, when we come to think of them, divested of their every day familiarity. Such stones, if any, should have "sermons in them," for those who have ears to hear.

Yonder city is adding to its Pantheon of Immortals, year by year, monuments of men who have lived and died.

Here is a monument to Time itself, reared without hands.

Nor does it lack readable inscriptions, some of which we have been feebly attempting to decipher.

"The testimony of the rocks" and the "footprints of the Creator" are one and the same thing.

"Before the mountains were brought forth, of old hast Thou laid the foundations of the earth, and a thousand years in Thy sight are but yesterday when it is past." S. H. Gooch.

The High School Association.

The first meeting of the Newton High School Association was held at Armory Hall, Thursday, June 24, at 7.30 p. m., and was a decided success. There were present about one hundred and eighty, and we understand that over two hundred and fifty tickets were sold. The inclemency of the weather was, no doubt, the reason which compelled many who would otherwise have come, to remain at home. The time before the calling to order of the meeting was most enjoyably passed in the meeting of old friends and class mates, and the making of new acquaintances. Between 8 and 9 o'clock, Mr. Jordan, '84, called the meeting to order. The minutes of the last meeting were read, and there being no objection, Mr. Partridge, '85, for the committee on drawing up a constitution for the society, next presented the report of the committee, together with a draught of the constitution recommended by the committee. Several amendments were proposed, but were not accepted, and the constitution as presented was adopted as the constitution of the association.

Mr. Henry Whitmore, '85, for the committee on nominations, next presented the nominations approved by the committee. The society showed their approval of the choice of the committee by frequent applause. On the question of adopting the report as submitted all voted "yea." Mr. S. Warren Davis, having been unanimously elected President of the association, took the chair and accepted the position in a speech thanking the society for the honor conferred upon him. Mr. Davis then introduced Mr. Edward H. Cutler, Head Master of the High School, who delivered a paper on the subject of "Liberal Education." At the end of the reading of the paper, selections were rendered by a quartette composed of past members of the school.

After the singing, Mr. Ames, chairman of the school committee, Mr. Hale, a former principal of the Newton High School, and Mr. Adams, also a former principal, were introduced in the order given, each making a few well-chosen remarks. The quartette also rendered more selections, and then the chair made the welcome announcement that refreshments were ready to be served, but added that as there were accommodations for eighty only, and one hundred and eighty present, it would be necessary to divide the company into two divisions. However, in time, all managed to obtain and partake of supper, after which they, as a general thing, wended their way upwards in order to enjoy dancing. Those who were able to do so, lingered until a quarter of twelve, and then departed with the feeling that, at least, the Newton High School had an Alumni Association that had come to stay.

Following is the list of the officers,—President, S. Warren Davis, '73; vice-presidents, George Hovey, '78, Miss Louisa Eddy, '82; secretary, Miss Abbie Bates, '83; treasurer, Walter Jackson, '80; executive committee—Miss Ellen Tewkesbury, '81; Morton Cobb, '83; Edward Jackson, '84; Miss Margaret Strong, '85, and Miss Mabel Stewart, '86.

High School Notes.

For an account of the fifth annual prize drill of the N. H. S. Battalion, see page 7.

Mr. S. Warren Davis will sail for England July 10.

The graduating exercises of the class of '86 will take place at the High School Building, Walnut street, Newtonville, Tuesday, June 29, at 10 a. m. As the School Committee has voted that up to 9.55, admission shall be by ticket only, those who have tickets should remember to bring them; those having reserved seat tickets should bring those also. Remember, invitations alone do not admit.

The last drill of the Battalion for '85-'86, took place Wednesday, June 23, when they were reviewed by Mr. Cutler.

The new picture of the battalion has been posted on the bulletin, and is a very good group picture, most of the faces being distinct and well defined.

The entrance examinations to Amherst were taken on Thursday and Friday, June 24 and 25. The examinations at Harvard take place July 1, 2, 3.

The last meeting of the N. H. S. Lyceum will take place at the High School Building, Saturday evening, June 26, at 7.30. There will be a program of excellent music and a debate on the subject, "Classical Education vs. Modern Language and Scientific Education." The speakers will be, for the Classics, Parsons, '86, S. Emery, '86; for the Generals, Cutler, '86, Ripley, '86, Crockett, '87. All are invited to attend and to bring their friends as it is desired to make this a wind-up befitting the society.

The editors of the Review for '85-'86 will be photographed as a group Saturday morning, June 26, by Glines.

The Newton Parliamentary Fund.

The committee appointed to obtain contributions from the liberty loving citizens of Newton, for the $5 Parliamentary fund, now being raised in support of the eminent jury measure of home rule for Ireland, have drawn up a circular which will shortly be sent out. It makes a strong appeal for contributions, which may be sent to the treasurer, Thomas B. Fitz, West Newton, or to any member of the committee, who are Edward H. Pierce, Geo. S. Harwood, Chas. C. Barton, Richard T. Sullivan, J. Wesley Barber, Isaac F. Kingsbury, Geo. D. Eldridge, Winthrop B. Atherton, P. A. Murray, James T. Allen, Geo. E. Johnson, P. A. McVicar.

To facilitate matters the following sub-committee has been appointed, who will receive money and give receipts:

J. Edward Hills, of Hills, Bullens & Co., Newton; E. J. Burke, Simon Mahan, Nonantum; John F. Payne, Williams drug store, Newtonville; J. H. Nickerson, Nickerson's Block, West Newton; Geo. E. Johnson, Auburndale; Daniel Warren, Newton Lower Falls; Thos. Coughlan, Philip T. Begley, Newton Upper Falls; Henry S. Williams, Farnum's Block, Newton Centre.

The list of contributors will be published. Boston has just sent $10,000, and another $10,000 will be sent in a few days. It is important that the money should be raised as soon as possible, and it is therefore hoped that those who intend to subscribe will send in their contributions promptly.

Field Day to Rockport.

The Second Field Day of the Newton Natural History Society will be held at Rockport, Cape Ann, Saturday, June 26. The cars will leave Boston by Eastern railroad at 10.45 a. m.; returning, leave Rockport at 5 p. m., arriving in Boston at 6.30. Round trip tickets from Boston $1.00. Invitations are extended to all who wish to accompany the society on this excursion. Should the day prove stormy or unpromising the excursion will be postponed one week. Tickets may be obtained of Dr. J. F. Frisbie and at the depot.

Contents of the Graphic.

The GRAPHIC this week is filled with matter interesting to Newton people. Besides the regular local news, an account of the excursion of the Women's Educational club to "The Wayside Inn" will be found on the third page, together with Mrs. Parker's address to the Lasell graduates, and the memorial to Mr. Josiah Lasell. On the seventh page is given a full account of the High School drill. The poem by Mrs. Reed, read at the Lasell commencement; an article by one of Newton's most gifted writers, Mr. S. H. Gooch, better known by a nom de plume, which he generally uses; a full account of the masonic celebration at Newtonville; and an interesting story, make up an unusually good number. A letter from "Sedge-worth," a prominent Newton lady, who is to give the GRAPHIC readers an account of her travels this summer, and several other articles that have been sent in have been crowded out this week, and will appear in our next issue. In this connection it might be stated that the demand for the GRAPHIC is constantly increasing, and this week we have passed the one thousand milestone, probably for the first time in the history of the paper.

Now let some of our public-spirited citizens buy the land which will be sold to-morrow at 3 o'clock, and erect a handsome hall, such as our ward greatly needs, and which would prove a profitable investment.

—Hon. H. B. Smith, Mayor of Philadelphia, and wife, spent Sunday here as the guests of Mr. Wm. H. Mendell. Mr. Smith has been enjoying the hospitality of the city of Boston the past week, and on Monday he and his wife, Mayor Kimball and wife, and the wives of Boston city officials were given a ride down the harbor to Moon Island, when the new sewerage works were inspected. Acting Mayor Chas. H. Allen of Boston and the Boston board of aldermen were the hosts of the occasion.

—Rev. Pleasant Hunter of Palmer, who has just resigned his charge to accept a pastorate at Newtonville, will be a notable acquisition to the Congregational denomination of this vicinity. Mr. Hunter is a native of Maryland, we think, and inherits many of the old-time qualities of the Southron. He is an indefatigable worker and an interesting, forcible speaker, and Newtonville people will be sure to give him a warm place in their hearts.—[Boston Commonwealth.]

—Frederick H. Butts and Miss Carrie M. Parker were married Thursday evening in the Central Congregational Church at Newtonville, the ceremony being performed by Rev. Dr. Duryea of Boston. The church was profusely decorated with flowers. Miss Fannie Humphrey was maid of honor, the bridesmaids being Misses Fannie Woodman, Belle Blodgett, Susie Gurney and Nellie Chamberlain. The best man was G. H. Butts, and the ushers Ned Leach, Nat Walker, Frank Seaman of Boston, and E. B. Jones of Newtonville. A reception followed at the home of the bride's parents. The couple will live in Newton Centre. The gifts were many.

Stickney of Manchester, N. H., Frank T. Robinson of Fort Worth, Texas. The exercises closed with a valedictory by C. Mortimer Brown, who enters the Massachusetts Institute of Technology after four years connection with the school. The exercises without exception reflected credit on the students and the school. The school has had a prosperous year with over eighty students from fifteen states, the Indian Territory, Cuba and Porto Rico, and enters upon its 34th year next September.

Friday morning he failed to appear and place is shut up, and it is thought that he has left town.

Wedding Chimes.

A wedding of more than common interest occurred on the evening of Thursday, June 17th, at the residence of Mr. Albert B. Baldwin, brother of the bride, on Crescent street.

The contracting parties were Whitman C. Robbins, D. D. S., whose parents are well known missionaries to Africa, and Miss Alice M. Baldwin, whose parents since 1847 have been engaged in mission work to the Chinese at Foochow, under the patronage of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions. Shortly after eight o'clock the bridal couple entered the tastefully decorated parlor, and took their stand under an arch composed of field-ferns and roses, when the marriage ceremony was at once performed. Dr. C. C. Baldwin, father of the bride, solemnizing the sacred tie, and prayer being offered by Rev. O. D. Kimball, pastor of the Baptist church. The bride was most becomingly attired in a simple white costume and at the conclusion of the ceremony received gracefully the congratulations of the relatives and friends who were present, after which a wedding supper was served by Mr. and Mrs. Albert Baldwin.

After a month's recreation, we understand it is the purpose of Mr. and Mrs. Robbins, to make their permanent residence in the city of Natal, South Africa, whither they will be followed by the best wishes of their many friends.

Lincoln-Wilson.

The spacious residence of Mr. E. B. Wilson, Highland street, West Newton, was the scene of a very fashionable gathering of ladies and gentlemen Thursday evening. The occasion was the marriage of their daughter, Miss Hattie E. Wilson to George T. Lincoln, a well known member of the legal profession in Boston. The wedding ceremony was witnessed by relatives and immediate friends, Rev. Julius C. Jaynes of the West Newton Unitarian Church tying the matrimonial knot. The bridesmaids were Miss Gertrude Lincoln, a cousin of the groom, and Miss Josephine Freeman, both of Somerville. The bride was attired in a heavy white silk, with lace trimmings, and carried a handsome bouquet. The ushers were Messrs. C. P. Lincoln (best man), Williston Lincoln, C. M. Hemenway and Harry Plaisted of Somerville, and Mr. Fred. A. Wilson, brother of the bride. The reception was attended by many out-of-town people, mostly from Somerville, where Mr. Wilson lived until recently, and from Boston. The residence was illuminated with Japanese lanterns, and inside a profusion of flowers lent a charm to the occasion. J. Howard Richardson's orchestra furnished the music and Weber of Boston the supper. The presents were elegant and costly, silverware being the chief remembrance. The wedding trip will be made to Chicago and St. Paul, and on the return Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln will live at West Newton.

NONANTUM.

—Frank Turner, an employee of the Silver Lake Cordage factory, lost two fingers Wednesday by catching his hand in a machine.

—A Committee has been formed to conduct a procession of horrors, and they request all young men and boys over twelve years of age to fix up and report on California street, foot of Chapel street, at 3 o'clock a. m., July 4th, without further notice.

—For a year or more past, the North Evangelical Society have been much annoyed and put to several hundred dollars expense by boys throwing stones and breaking the windows, and also the slates on the church building. Last Friday afternoon, three boys, about 12 years of age, were caught by Mr. Wm. Jones, while throwing stones at the windows and on the roof. They were handed over to Officer Davis and no terms of settlement have been offered by the standing committee, who propose to make an example of the young rascals. It is time that a stop was put to this stone-throwing, and we hope that this batch will be severely dealt with.

DALHOUSIE LODGE OBSERVES ITS 25TH ANNIVERSARY.

Dalhousie lodge of Freemasons observed its 25th anniversary last evening in Masonic Hall, Newtonville, by appropriate exercises, which included a historical address by Worshipful Past Master S. W. Trowbridge of Cambridge, public installation of officers and a banquet. About 250 persons were present, including four or five charter members, several past masters and a number of visitors from surrounding towns. A large number of ladies were in attendance. Music was rendered by the Mendelssohn male quartet. The reception committees were Past Masters George E. Bridges, J. B. Fulle and W. A. Weilerbee, and the committee of arrangements were John W. Fisher, A. L. Harwood, Edwin W. Gay, A. T. Sylvester, and G. P. Whitmore.

The historical address by Past Master S. W. Trowbridge was substantially as follows: The first meeting of which there is any record was held at Tremont Hall, Newtonville, on the afternoon of June 25, 1860. Several informal meetings had been held prior to this date, of which there is no record, but from the record of the first meeting, it appears that at one of the preliminary meetings, of which Worshipful Brother W. D. Coolidge was chairman, and Brother A. B. Underwood was secretary, it was decided to issue a call to the Masonic brethren of Newton to meet at Tremont Hall, Newtonville, June 25, 1860, for an appropriate recognition of St. John's Day. At that meeting action was taken to petition for a dispensation from the W. M. grand master, and on the 15th of the following September, the first regular meeting was held under the dispensation in a room over Tremont Hall, Brother W. D. Coolidge acting as master. At this meeting 23 members were present of the 36 who signed the petition for a dispensation, and by them it was determined to name the lodge Dalhousie in honor of Lord Dalhousie of Scotland, and to honor the memory of the grand master of Scotland, whose term of office continued from Nov. 30, 1767, to Nov. 30, 1769, and, who, on the 30th day of May in the latter year, granted letters of dispensation to Gen. Joseph Warren, by which he became grand master of the Masons of Boston and within 100 miles of the same. At this meeting a committee reported that the Methodist society of Newtonville was about to erect a church, and would finish off a hall in the second story for the use of the lodge, and the committee were authorized to contract for the use of it. While the hall was building, there was no suitable place in which to hold meetings, and the Pequot lodge kindly tendered the use of its rooms, which offer would have been accepted, but the R. W. grand master would not grant permission to go out of town to confer the degrees. Therefore, the next meeting was held in the Swedenborgian chapel, and from that time until Feb. 20, 1861, when the first meeting in Masonic Hall, over the Methodist church, was held, the meetings were held in the Swedenborgian chapel and in the room over Tremont Hall. Brother W. D. Coolidge continued to act as worshipful master until Dec. 20, 1860, when he, having been elected grand master, was obliged to resign, and Brother Peter C. Jones was elected to fill the vacancy. On the 24th of June, 1861, St. John's day, the new hall was dedicated by the grand lodge, the new lodge instituted, the charter received and the officers installed, Brother A. A. Kendall was installed master. He soon after went to war and was killed in September, 1862, at Sharpsburg, while attending wounded soldiers in the field. Grand master Coolidge went to Maryland for the body, and the remains were brought back to Newton, and buried from St. Mary's church, Newton Lower Falls, Sept. 30, 1862, with Masonic honors, Grand Master Coolidge officiating. The headboard which was taken from his grave on the battle-field was presented to, and preserved by Dalhousie lodge. The lodge continued to occupy the hall over the church until 1875, the last meeting being held there March 31. The lodge having grown to a membership of nearly 230, and it being the desire of many of the members to establish other Masonic orders, for which, other and larger rooms were necessary, arrangements were made with Hon. Wm. Claflin for the present spacious and convenient quarters, May 12, 1875, the new hall was dedicated. Commencing with 36 members, the lodge has during the 25 years of its existence received 524 applications for membership. There have been 149 rejected, and the number demitted, died, etc., is 233. The present membership is 178. Of the large number demitted, some have withdrawn to form a new lodge.

At the conclusion of the address, the quartet rendered "Comrades in Arms." After the reception of the installing officer, R. W. Harvey N. Shepard of Boston, that officer proceeded to install the officers as follows: Worshipful master, A. L. Harwood; senior warden, J. W. Fisher; junior warden, G. F. Whitmore; treasurer, E. W. Gay; secretary, E. E. Morgan; chaplain, A. T. Sylvester; marshal, J. A. Blanchard; S. D., Robert Bennett; J. D., J. T. Chadburn; S. S., E. A. Whitney; J. S., G. A. Gleason; I. S., C. A. Peck; organist, G. A. Brown. One of the many pleasant features of the evening was the presentation of a past master's jewel to the retiring master, H. H. Mather.

About 250 sat down to the fine banquet provided, and Worshipful Master Harwood presided, but owing to the lateness of the hour, the toasts were confined to two. Past Master Cephas Brigham responded in a very happy manner for the ladies, and R. W. Harvey N. Shepherd made a very interesting and pertinent speech on "Ancient Masonry" as revealed in the ruins of Rome and other ancient cities. Mr. Shepherd has such a fine voice and pleasing manner, that it is a pleasure to listen to him.

One fact worthy of note is, that this is the 18th time Mr. Alexander Chisholm has been appointed to the office of Tyler.

IN THE BRIGHT JUNE WEATHER.

ant sight; a tiny park, which, kept green and orderly by neighborhood contribution, amply repaid the modest outlay in offering its comfort of green and waving grass to eyes tired with long dreariness of brick and mortar. There were roses just now clambering over the little trellis on the side next Karen's window; and by half shutting her eyes, and like poor Glory McWhir, "pretending fancy hard," she could sometimes almost fancy herself back on the piazza of the dear old Pennsylvania parsonage where, two years ago, she and her father had together watched the sunsets, glad in the perfume of their own June roses, as it came blown to them on the twilight wind. Only two years ago! It seemed to her impossible sometimes that so little time should have passed between that time and this; she had been so very happy then; so careless and so young.

The girl sank wearily down into the low chair by the window, resting her arm upon the sill, her bright head drooping listlessly. How friendly and simple a thing life had seemed to her two years ago, all through those busy days whose labor was never fretwork! What, in comparison, was the little task just finished, that it should leave her so tired in heart and body? she was asking herself, a little scornfully, just then. To be sure, on the occasions of Bridget's frequent summons to a second cousin's funeral, it was from the kitchen chaos that she always found herself expected to evolve order and neatness, while her cousins, in aprons of strong aesthetic suggestiveness, busied themselves with the glass and silver in the shaded dining-room beyond. And she was no patient Griseldis, this little yellow-haired girl not twenty years old; her foolish heart ached many and many a time with the petty burdens laid upon her by careless or selfish hands, and the weary distastefulness of work that no love brightened.

A band of street-musicians had just come into the grassy park. Leaning a little farther out into the soft gray air, Karen watched them with an idly pleasant sense of relief from the company of her own dull thoughts.

"That majestic creature with the cornet wears his cloak for all the world like an operatic brigand!" she said to herself with faint amusement. "And why, in the name of reason, should he need a cloak at all of a June night?" She half rose, with an unformed idea of calling Grace and Philippa to see; but remembering that they did not greatly share her sense of the humorous, she sank back into her former position with a little sigh. The "Sweet By-and-By" was not, perhaps, the music of all other to which she would have chosen to listen just then; but it was not, after all, ill-played, and the homely cadences came with a pleasant sound through the quiet air. Karen could not see that the brigand-looking leader, having sufficiently mastered his not very difficult score to trust his eyes for a moment elsewhere, was sending up a scrutinizing glance at her from under the opportune shelter of his hat.

"Upon my word, it's amazing," he was saying to himself, "how little difference there is sometimes in the look of mistress and maid! Now take that little girl up there (Nova Scotia; I wonder? Yes, probably Nova Scotia; there's nothing Hibernian about her, that's a certainty), take her and put her in a white gown and a big hat, and if she were promenading the campus class-day, not one of us fellows would think her out of place. It's a mighty pretty pose, that of hers, just now, with her chin dropped into the palms of her two hands. If I could sketch like Dick Stephenson!"—But at this moment Pfeiffer, who, free from the terror of his accustomed leader's eye, had allowed his natural inertia to get rather the better of him, accomplished such a discord as to draw uncomplimentary allusions even from his phlegmatic companions, and the cornetist was effectually roused from his reverie.

By-and-by, as the last notes of "Bonny Doon" were quavering slenderly forth from Pfeiffer's clarinet (the other performers had finished several seconds before), Karen called softly across the little hall, "Girls, girls! the concert is over, and they're coming for pennies! Haven't you a few to spare for them?"

"Bless you, child! All my pennies are saving up for my class-day roses!" said Grace, not ill-humoredly; but Philippa's tone was slightly acid as she cried, "I can't conceive, Karen, why you're always giving money to some sort of street beggar or other! You're getting us simply overrun with them lately!"

Karen had a minute's brisk struggle with the answer rising to her lips; and then she said very pleasantly, "Well, I think sometimes that in a state of pre-existence I must have been a wandering vagabond myself; I know so well what an agreeable thrill the sight of a dime gives one."

As she kindled a lamp, the better to search out her modest purse from its lurking-place on the clock-shelf, she saw that the eccentric figure of the band-leader stood already below the window. "It's lucky that English isn't his native language!" she said, laughing to herself, as she leaned out with her little silver coin.

Something in the slender and delicate outline of that girlish figure as she bent forward, a graceful silhouette against the lighted background, her bright, disordered hair like a sort of softened halo around the fair, kind face, apparently proved too much for the Teutonic phlegm which the young man, waiting below, had assumed with his striking garments. As he deftly caught the shining bit of silver, he snatched the sheltering hat quite from a close-cropped, comely head; and the giver of the small largess found herself saluted with such a bow as precedent had certainly never led her to expect from a strolling player. She drew quickly back, angry to find herself flushing as pink as her own June roses. "I believe Philippa is more than half right about such people! The impertinence of that man! Why, his bow was—was absolutely personal!" the girl said to herself indignantly.

She crossed to the table to turn down the flickering lamp; and then, half-way out of the room, paused irresolutely.

"They usually play once by way of 'thank you' for their pennies," she thought. "And even one of Sankey's hymns, with the twilight and the smell of roses, is better than the sitting-room and Kensington work for a little while."

But it was not one of Sankey's hymns which presently came thrilling out into the soft and dusky air. The young leader had gone back to his place (it was a clever bit of legerdemain he had performed on the way to slip that time out of sight, and leave a silver quarter lying among the pennies instead), and he had said to his fellow-musicians, "You can rest for a moment if you like; there's something I've a fancy to try by myself."

And then upward through the summer night, played as Tom Endicott had never felt moved to play it at other places and times, with the yearning of its hopeless passion and the immortal sweetness of its faith and loss, rose the music of Schubert's serenade:

"Leise flehen meine Lieder, Durch die Nacht zu Dir."

it sang; and as the girl listened to that tender music, which of all others her father had loved best to hear her play in those old days of the dear lost home far away, she all unconsciously crossed again to the open window, and stood once more a gentle, wistful figure against the softened light. And when presently it was all done and the musicians were gone away, she sank down beside the low chair and lay quite silent, her head upon her folded arms.

It was quite an hour later, and the clock was striking eight as Karen came suddenly into the sitting-room, her face flushed and her eyes bright with the excitement of a thought which had just brought its tardy message.

"O Aunt Caroline!" she cried, pausing before the chair where that lady sat evolving a crimson Kensington oval from her inner consciousness and the depths of her creased-bag. "Aunt Caroline, whatever shall I do? I never even remembered this afternoon, what with Bridget's hurrying away so and tea to get, I never remembered that it was to-day I promised to get out to Cambridge to fetch my class-day gown from the chest at Aunt Hetty's! And they all go to the beach to-morrow morning! It's the only gown I have in the world that I could make do for Friday, you know, and I cannot possibly have it if I do not go to-day." Her face was full of girlish distress. "And oh, I want so to go out to Harvard, it is so very long since I have had even a little pleasure! Would it be so very dreadful if I were to go out to Cambridge alone now, Aunt Caroline?" the girl asked breathlessly. "It is not quite dark yet, and do you think anything could happen to me, when I should scarcely be out of the car at all, going or coming?" she pleaded.

The conventionalities of life never offered any very formidable difficulties to worthy Mrs. Caroline Hammond, and her niece's wild project met with no very pronounced opposition. "But I think it is very foolish of you, all the same," she said, as a moment later Karen came hurrying down stairs in her modest hat and mantle, and stood in the open door, looking a little tremulously down the darkening street. "You must just take your own risk, Karen, being out alone after dark, and in those horrid Cambridge cars too! I don't see why you should care so much about class-day, either," she went on with characteristic tact. "Dick Stephenson only sent your card, you know, out of compliment to your cousins, and if you didn't go, I dare say he wouldn't take it unkindly." But the good lady was talking to the empty air. Karen had slipped down the steps, and was speeding swiftly down the street.

III.

Like the average Harvard boy, Tom Endicott, when no especially attractive society was to be found within a car, greatly preferred to make his journey on the front platform. He was thinking as he stood there just then, with the keen east wind blowing saltily across his face, of how often he had heard those lights which

"Quiver
Far out in the river,
From window and basement," compared to the lights of Venice. "I wonder if after all it will seem so jolly next year to see Venice and those fine old places, as I've been always fancying it would," he said to himself. "It's queer to know that the four years' grind is so nearly over. They've not been half bad years, though. By Jove! but it will seem hard to say good-by to all the fellows and have them scatter so to the four corners of the earth! I hope Jack can get his leave of absence. Meg would be no end disappointed not to meet me in London." He smiled to himself at a sudden thought, and with an amused half-consciousness of his inches and muscles, he thought, "I'll be bound that Meg will call me 'Baby' at the first go off, if it's before a deck full of people! It would be like her for all the world, dear soul! Well, and I'm glad it's no worse a record I have to carry her," he said to himself. "I shan't come out quite at the end of the rank-list if only I can crowd past that confounded examination on German Seven."

The last subject of thought was not a cheerful one. To escape from it, he turned idly about, to amuse himself with a study of his fellow-passengers through the window just behind. In a moment his attitude had changed, and he stood strongly on his feet, the blood quickening in his veins. A young lady (even with Tom Endicott's late associations with that slight and gentle figure, he said to himself now, "a young lady!") was sitting in the corner of the car nearest him, or rather crouching there, so closely had she pressed herself backward, as if appealing to the inanimate support behind her for help and protection. Her clear eyes were wide and dark with repulsion and fear. Opposite her, the only other occupant of the car, a young man sat, with leering, half-closed eyes fixed staringly on her delicate and shrinking face. It did not need the disorder of his foppish dress to tell the story of that condition of maudlin bestiality which so forcibly appeals to every healthy mind for the whole some bestial restraints of whip and chain.

Endicott did not stop for a second glance. Flung the door wide, he entered the car, and quietly seated himself beside the little figure in the corner; meeting in her stead the leering eyes whose owner was just then leaning unsteadily forward with the evident intent of addressing her. The would-be speaker was well under the influence of his late potatoes, but he was not yet so lost to the instinct of self-preservation as not to lurch abruptly toward an upright position as he met the look flashing out from the new-comer's eyes. He dizzily observed that the powerful right hand of his opposite neighbor nervously clenched and unclenched itself as it rested on his knee. After a moment's silence, during which the keen hazel eyes had not lost their fire and sternness, he muttered confusedly something about its being "cooler outside," and so presently stumbled toward the door, which was closed behind him by invisible agency.

With the sort of intuition, which is not so exclusively the privilege of women as they would sometimes have us think, Endicott bethought himself of the little copy of "Faust" in his coat-pocket, and producing it, was soon, to all appearances, as absorbed in its pages as even his instructor in "German Seven" could desire. "For she is in no condition to speak or to be spoken to," he was thinking with his eyes fixed on the lines which even under less exacting circumstances would have been quite unintelligible to him; "and after all, what is there to say? I wonder if by any unlucky chance she has recognized me without that infernal toggery. If she has, it's no wonder she doesn't think it safe to look at me even," the young fellow said wrathfully to himself.

His quickened senses caught the sharp, suppressed sob with which the girl at his side relaxed the tense strain of her attitude. The certainty of how she was trembling as she sat, sent an odd sort of thrill from his heart to his finger-tips. As he glanced at the unsteady figure precariously maintaining its balance just outside the window, certain muscles of his right arm seemed to twitch, as with a distinct sense of lost opportunity. "But drunk or sober, I don't suppose the little cad is worth a knock-down blow," he thought.

As a slender, gray-mantled figure passed a few minutes later into the transfer car in waiting at the end of the long bridge, Endicott was considerably surprised to find himself leaping upon its platform. "But I suppose that brute yonder is not the only one of his kind abroad at this hour," was the sole explanation he vouchsafed to himself, and he seemed to find it satisfactory. Ten minutes later he stood well back into the shadow of the tall houses, watching the girl speed down the street as if she had borrowed Mercury's winged sandals. "Now will it be the front door or the back?" he asked; and was most distinctly angry with himself for lingering to see his question answered. "For what in the universe can it matter to me whether she is lady or lady's maid?" he said. But he lingered still; and it was with a long breath, curiously like a sigh of satisfaction, that he saw it was the front door which opened to receive her, and how some one standing just within caught the girl's hands and kissed her, like one relieved from anxious waiting. Did the girlish figure linger on the threshold for just a tiny moment, with face turned backward down the shadowy street? He never knew; but he knew he found himself standing there uncovered, his pulses beating hard and fast.

IV.

There is, perhaps, no more blithe and charming sight in all the world than the famous Hemenway Gymnasium on "class night." There comes to one's mind that old riddle of Samson's that "out of the strong is come forth sweetness." For the mighty beams and girders are all soft with evergreen and beautiful with waving flags, and the air is sweet with many roses, as through it the wild waltz-music throbs and sings. There is the silken frou-frou of rustling gowns and fluttering fans; and everywhere shine out the fair young faces that gladden Harvard's blossom-day.

Something of all this may have been vaguely stirring in the thoughts of the young man who had just turned from the gallery window, against which he had been leaning, and stood looking down a little listlessly on the brilliant crowd below. Something in the glitter and gaiety seemed to jar for the moment against his mood; for he presently turned back again to his former position, and stood looking far out beyond the swaying lights of the campus, to where the deserted fields lay silent under the silent stars.

"After all," he said to himself, "class day really belongs to the undergrads far more than it does to us fellows who are at the end of it all. I had a jollier time when I was a freshman even than I've had to-day. As Phillips said at the baccalaureate sermon, it seems too much as if a man were assisting at his own funeral. And perhaps it's not been quite the same with me to-day as it has with the other fellows," he thought. "It's a bit lonely not to have one's own folks to shake hands with such a day as this." He laid his hand, with a half-unconscious, boyish impulse over the pocket in which he had carried all day his sister Meg's loving letter. Something came for a second between him and the stars; he felt a curious tightening about the heart. He spoke half aloud, forgetting where he stood. "I wonder if mother has known," he said.

He stood suddenly quite erect, biting his upper lip hard. "It isn't the place here for this sort of thing," he told himself, sharply. "And what are my dear five hundred friends doing all this time, I wonder, with no one to find partners for them?" He crossed to the gallery staircase, and half-way down suddenly paused. His eyes brightened, and his hand, resting upon the rail, unconsciously tightened its clasp. Then he finished the descent at quite a different speed.

A moment later, Dick Stephenson, making his way through the crowd, with Miss Karen Reid upon his arm, became suddenly conscious by a species of Free Masonry peculiar to college chums, that Tom Endicott, standing just in the shadow of the staircase, was desirous of being presented to the young lady beside him. Stephenson had been regarding for the past few moments, with an eye of desire, the vacant seat yonder beside a certain young person in a bewitching violet gown, and he seized his opportunity.

"Miss Reid," he said, "will you allow me to present a friend to you? That tall, fair-haired fellow—don't you see, standing just under—" Stephenson paused in surprise. Miss Reid's clasp upon his arm had suddenly tightened, and her sensitive face was flushing painfully.

"Oh, no, I beg of you not," she was saying earnestly. "Of course, if he's an acquaintance of yours, I don't doubt he is perfectly respectable and nice, and I know how kind-hearted he is, but—but—" blundered poor Karen; and then her face brightened with a sudden inspiration. "I don't speak German the least bit, and so you see we couldn't get on together at all," she said.

The "tall, fair-haired fellow" was filled with mingled curiosity and rage, at seeing his chum suddenly throw back his head, with a burst of uncontrollable laughter. "Upon my word, Miss Reid, I wouldn't have believed it of you," he cried. "Never to let a fellow suspect your gift of irony until now! And how did you know what a tight squeeze that was of Endicott's on German Seven? We don't usually boast our hairbreadth escapes of that sort," he laughed.

"Endicott? German Seven?" the girl faltered, and then "Why should you try to make sport of me so?" she said. "I know that young man is not a Harvard student; he is a street musician, one of a strolling band!" she cried indignantly.

"Well, I never heard the Pierian Sodality called just that before!" said her escort, with undiminished mirth. "And as for Tom Endicott's being a Harvard man—why, bless you, Miss Reid, their isn't a better-known man in college! Haven't you heard of him as the son of old Endicott, the California millionaire? Why, his father died six years ago, owner of two-thirds of the Ceres and Heubach Mine! Street-band!" cried the young man, and his amusement would have broken forth again had not the very evident distress and bewilderment in the face of the girl beside him suddenly brought him to his senses. "Now it is very clear there's a mix of some sort here," he said, good-humoredly, "and wouldn't the shortest way out of it be to let me bring Endicott here to speak for himself?"

V.

They had, by mutual consent, chosen to walk in the quiet streets, outside the brilliant enclosure. But now that it was getting late, Endicott was reluctantly forced to remember that his dear five hundred friends were probably waiting to thank him for the charming entertainment which he had not been, of late, instrumental in providing.

"Do you know," he was saying, as they neared the arch of Japanese lanterns which marked the entrance gate, "I think I shall take up prophecy as my future profession. For when I first saw you I fancied you here to-night wearing just such a gown as that."

"And you think it would be more profitable than the law?" asked Karen Reid, demurely.

From which we may infer that her companion had already become surprisingly confidential with regard to his future plans. They paused a moment at the brilliant arch.

"When I come to see you—and it's the proper thing, I believe, to call within a week after getting permission—you must not be surprised if I feel myself impelled, for association's sake, to present myself by way of the park and the kitchen window," the young fellow said. "And will you reward my efforts with another dime, like—" but here he paused abruptly. It was, perhaps, rather early in their acquaintance to display the little coin that lay so near his hand.

In after years, Karen Endicott said, many a time, that when, leaning upon a strong arm, she passed that June night, beneath that arch of wavering lights, she passed forever from loneliness and fretwork into a new life of happiness and shelter and peace. Over in front of Holworthy the band was playing Schubert's serenade.

HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA

Has "decided" claims upon the public. This is positively proven by the immense good it has done to those who have been cured of diseases from which they have suffered intensely for years, as verified by the published testimonials, every one of which is a positive fact.

CHELSEA, VT., Feb. 24, 1879.

Messrs. C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.: The 6th day of last June I was taken sick with a swelling on my right foot, and with an awful pain. The swelling went all over me. My face was swelled so that I could with difficulty see out of my eyes, and I broke out over the whole surface of my body; my right foot up to my knee was one raw, itching mass, and my ankle and foot so lame and sore I could not step on it, and it would run so as to wet a bandage through in an hour. In this condition Mr. W. F. Hood of the firm of A. R. Hood & Son, druggists of this town, handed me a bottle of Hood's SARSAPARILLA, and told me to take it. I did so, and by the time I had taken one bottle I found that it was doing me good. I have since taken five bottles more. After I had taken three bottles my soreness began to leave me, and I have been growing better every day, so that today I can walk without going lame. I have no soreness in my ankle and it has healed all up, and does not run at all. I owe my recovery to your SARSAPARILLA. I write this to let you know that I think it deserves the confidence of the public, especially those who are troubled with humors.

Yours most truly,
JOSIAH FITKIN.
P. S. Every person that saw said I never would get over my lameness without having a running sore on my ankle; but thank God I have.

The Light that is Felt.

A tender child of summers three,
Seeking her little bed at night,
Paused on the dark stair timidly,
"Oh, mother! take my hand," said she,
"And then the dark will all be light."
We older children grope our way
From dark behind to dark before;
And only when our hands we lay,
Dear Lord, in thine, the night is day,
And there is darkness nevermore.
Reach downward to the sunless days
Wherein our guides are blind as we,
And faith is small and hope delays;
Take thou the hands of prayer we raise,
And let us feel the light of thee!
JOHN G. WHITTIER.

NEWTON HIGH SCHOOL DRILL.

THE FIFTH ANNUAL FIELD DAY OF THE BATTALION.

On the afternoon of Saturday, June 19, about 2,000 people from all parts of Newton assembled at the Eliot Estate, West Newton to witness the Fifth Annual Prize Drill of the N. H. S. Battalion. The day, though pleasant, was uncomfortably hot for those who participated in the drill, was not, in fact, one of those days which inspires both participants and spectators with enthusiasm, but a day which tempted one to do what one had to do with as little effort as possible.

Promptly at 2.30 p. m. the reveille was sounded, the cannon discharged, the flag raised, the band playing the Star Spangled Banner; and Company C, under command of Capt. S. Wallace Moore, marched on to the drill ground, and the drill commenced.

The company went through the program of movements very well, one of the most noticeable defects being a poor step at several times, and then left the field at the double quick. No sooner had Company C left the field than Company B, under command of Capt. H. H. Haskell, marched on to the field, and proceeded to go through the required movements. For a short time the friends of the company felt confident that it was destined to win one of the prizes, but soon the most hopeful lost all hope, as he saw his favorites repeatedly break badly after coming into single rank from the commands "to the rear," "four left about" and "four right about." It is fair to the company, however, to say that the breaks were made by those who had not attended the rehearsal the day before as they should. B, having left the field, an intermission of about five minutes followed, and then the Bayonet Squad, under command of Adj. E. A. Crockett made its appearance, and proceeded to go through a series of very interesting and pretty movements. Several new movements were introduced, the most interesting being the rally by company. The movements of the squad were, as a whole, well executed, the loadings and firings being especially well done, and eliciting well deserved applause. Once or twice, one or two of the boys lost the cadence, but the loss was so slight as to be scarcely noticeable, and was almost immediately rectified. The Bayonet Squad, having finished, was marched off the field, and there was a short intermission.

The next to compete for the prize flags was Company D, the "Pony Company," under command of Captain C. L. Eddy. Their drill was a surprise even to their best and most hopeful friends. They put more enthusiasm and determination into their drill than any company that had yet made its appearance, and the audience showed its appreciation of their pluck, by applauding heartily. As they left the field many believed that the red flag would be presented to the "Ponies" when the award was made. Next came the old reliable Company A, Capt. W. M. Jones commanding. The company is made up of the largest men in the battalion, who have, as a general thing, been members of the battalion the last two years. As they marched on and around the field, one could not help noticing that there was a confident way about the company, which seemed to indicate the presence of the feeling, that they knew that if they drilled their best, they were sure, at least, to win the second prize. But, nevertheless, it looked once or twice as though they had lost all chance of even the second prize. The company had done very well until the wheel in single rank, and then they appeared to be badly rattled, making a miserable wheel, and, again, the dress after the command "in double rank, left front into line" was very bad, the line being more like a curve than a straight line. But their wheel and dress in double rank was excellent and duly appreciated by the audience. This ended the competition for the flags, and Baldwin's Cadet Band proceeded to render a few selections, while those who intended to compete for the individual prizes prepared themselves for the drill, and those members of the battalion who were not to compete struggled for ice cream, water, and a good position from which to view the struggle for the medals.

After a few minutes wait, the Competition Squad, under the command of Lieut. F. H. Hitchcock, marched to its position, counted whole numbers, every fifth man marched one face to the front, and the competition for the medals commenced. Twice again the squad came on to the field, each time with fewer members. On the last or third round there were five men, all corporals, and much to the delight of '88, all members of '88; they were Corporals Howard, Seales, C. E. Whitmore, Burrage, and B. B. Smith. These five drilled until the judges expressed themselves decided, and then left the grounds amid applause from the audience, the waving of white by '88 and its friend, and the waving of the other class colors. Next came more music. After the music came the battalion drill under command of Major W. Z. Ripley. The movements of the battalion were well executed, the only serious defect being the apparent lack of knowledge of the drum corps as where to go and how to get there. After the battalion drill came the Skirmish Drill, under command of Lieut. Henry Whitmore.

The skirmishers skirmished very well, but showed great eagerness to shoot, so much so that in one of the rallies by company they fired at the command aim. However, after their ardor had somewhat cooled, they fired almost unitedly in a subsequent rally by company, and in firing by company they did exceptionally well. After this drill more intermission, more music, and more struggle among the fellows for water and ice-cream, and then the final events of the day and program, the dress parade and presentations of prizes.

The Dress Parade was very well executed and presented a very fine appearance.

Mr. Ames, chairman of the school committee, then addressed the boys, after which Mayor Kimball presented the prizes.

The company prize flags presented by the class of '87 were awarded as follows: First prize awarded to company A, Capt. W. W. Jones; Second Prize awarded to Company D, Capt. C. L. Eddy. Commemorative medals were presented to Lieut. Henry Whitmore of Company A. and to Lieut. F. M. Elms of Company D.

The individual medals presented by the Class of '88 were awarded as follows: First Prize awarded to Corporal B. B. Smith; Second Prize awarded to Corporal Severance Burrage. Honorable Mention was awarded to Corporal C. E. Whitmore. At the close of the Dress Parade the retreat was sounded, the cannon fired, the flag lowered, and the Fifth Annual Prize Drill of the N. H. S. Battalion passed into history as an excellent drill, but not quite equal to that of last year. The judges were Major Charles L. Hovey, Captain J. Marion Moulton, and Lieutenant George H. Benyon. The officer of the day was Lieutenant William C. Brown.

July Magazines.

No article in the July number of the Atlantic will attract more attention than the Autocrat's engaging description of his first visit to Europe, more than fifty years ago. Dr. Holmes has written nothing for a long time more charming in quality or more thoroughly characteristic. Philip Gilbert Hamerton gives the first paper of his series, "French and English." In these articles he will indicate the differences in manners and morals, modes of life and of thought, between the neighboring nations. George Frederic Parson's vigorous paper on "The Labor Question" is a timely contribution. John Fiske has another noteworthy article relating to the time of confusion and almost bankruptcy succeeding the Revolutionary War. "The Princess Casamassima," Mr. James's socialistic novel, continues to dissect the characters represented, but it can hardly be said to grow in interest. It is getting to be a duty instead of a pleasure to read Mr. James. There are installments of Craddock's "In the Clouds" and Bishop's "The Golden Justice," and a good short story, "Sibyl the Savage," by Mrs. Champney. There are, of course, some excellent literary articles, the most noticeable being Miss Preston's admirable paper on "Onida." The Contributor's Club and Books of the Month complete a remarkable number, which fitsly opens the fifty-eighth volume of the magazine. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

Demorest's Magazine is a welcome visitor to the household circle, and the July number possesses much merit. Among the articles worthy of mention are "Clara Morris, the Emotional Actress," by Mrs. Croly, "A Dorsetshire Paradise," "The Irish Haunts of Oliver Goldsmith," "Art Work in Metals," and "Author Costumes." Mrs. Hart's serial increases in interest, and "From Pencil to Brush" is of value to art students. W. Jennings Demorest contributes "The Infancy of the Liquor Traffic," "Our Appeal to the Young," and "The Press on the Rum Traffic." The frontispiece is a queer oil picture, "Lear and the Fool."

—Mr. Charles Grout, of Grout, Warren & Blanchard, of Boston, has taken a house here for the summer.

—Officer Bartlett is slowly improving, but his injuries will lay him up for some time.

—A recent sale of real estate is that of Mr. Sidney P. Clark to John C. Brickett, $4350, land and buildings on Knowles street, 7626 feet.

—Rev. George C. Phipps will preach at the First Congregational church Sunday morning, and the pastor, Rev. T. J. Holmes, in the evening.

—Mrs. C. C. Barton is so ill at Atlanta, Ga., that her husband and children have gone to that city. Mrs. Barton has been at the South for several months, in the hope that a milder climate would prove beneficial.

—The Chautauqua Circle were invited to hold their last meeting of the year at Mrs. Gardiner Colby's residence, Monday night, where they were handsomely entertained. Mrs. E. J. E. Thorp gave one of her very interesting readings.

Numerous friends of Mr. and Mrs. D. A. White gathered at their pleasant home on Glen avenue on Wednesday evening. Chinese lanterns, tents and awnings decorated the house, grounds and trees. Practically it would have been more of a lawn party if the clouds had not that day given the grass refreshing rains. Boston, Providence, Newton and other places were represented. The occasion was a very pleasant one. The music from Kohl's Band was excellent, and those who chose to dance did it so gracefully that the lookers-on felt quite sure they had somewhere danced before.

—Officer Bartlett was seriously injured Sunday evening by a party of Germans from Boston Highlands, who had spent the day on a picnic excursion at Oak Hill. They had taken too much beer and were quarrelsome and boisterous. About 15 of the party started to go home on foot in the direction of Dudley and Boylston streets, and, when near the residence of Mr. Samuel Jackson, they met a young man named Keyser, with whom one of the Germans picked up a quarrel, which finally ended in an assault. Officer Bartlett, who lives in the vicinity, was in his house and heard the disturbance, and hurried to the spot. He attempted to arrest the man who committed the assault on Keyser, when he was set upon by the whole crowd of drunken Germans and terribly pounded. They knocked him down, took his club away, and pounded him with it over the head and face until he was covered with blood. One of the party, more savage than the rest, struck the officer twice on the head with the butt of a rifle, which laid the scalp open. Mr. Samuel Jackson, who witnessed the assault, drove immediately to the Centre for assistance, and in about ten minutes Officers Huestis and Fletcher were on the spot. They found Officer Bartlett covered with blood and hardly able to stand. The Germans had gone, but the officers followed them with a team and overtook them on Boylston street, near the ice-houses. They took to the woods when they saw the officers coming, but five of the worst ones were caught by Officers Fletcher and Huestis and locked up. They gave their names as Charles Sheldie, Andrew Cramer, John Vogie, Christian Baman and Charles Welseron. Officer Bartlett's injuries are quite serious, and his physician thinks he will not be able to be out for a week. In the Newton police court Monday morning his assailants were arraigned for disturbing the peace, and assaulting an officer. As Officer Bartlett was unable to appear in court, they were held in $500 each for trial next Monday.

NEWTON UPPER FALLS.

—The Quinobegun Association held their annual strawberry festival Friday evening.

—Rev. Thomas DeGruchy conducted the noon meeting of the Boston Y. M. C. A. to-day (Friday).

—Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Hamm in an unostentatious manner celebrated the third anniversary of their wedding at the residence of the latter's parents, Charles Fenner, Esq., on Elliot street, Saturday last. A large number of intimate friends and relatives being present.

—The city of Newton is the only city of importance in New England without an electric light of any nature. Many small villages of only about 200 or 300 inhabitants all over the Eastern states have them, the latest being Turner's Falls, a small manufacturing village up in the western part of this state.

—Rev. Thomas DeGruchy of the Baptist church presented his resignation last Sunday, to accept of a call to Revere. This will be a loss to the church for which he has done much, the result of his labors being apparent on every hand. His salary at Revere will not be an increase over what he received here, as stated in last week's GRAPHIC.

—The matter of furnishing fireworks for the city of Boston, July 4, the contract for which rightfully belongs to the United States Fireworks Company of this village because they offered the largest and best display for the sum expended, grows exceedingly exciting. The contract made by the Boston commissioners is liable to be annulled, because the said commissioners were not legally confirmed. At the aldermen's meeting, Monday, after a most searching arraignment by Aldermen Smith and Sullivan, their confirmation was refused, and new commissioners must be appointed, and a new contract made, with a good prospect of success for the U. S. Co., as all save one of both commission and committee on same are unanimous in awarding the contract to this company. This whole trouble originated in a city official, who, not unlike some of Newton's city officials, considered himself omnipotent, and able to dictate to his superior officers. The attempt was a failure, and resulted in a quick "set upon," but here is where he was not so successful as Newton's similar lord-of-all-they-survey officials.

—The up-river outing and fleet entertainment of the Echo Bridge Boat Club, June 17, was, notwithstanding the unfavorable condition of the weather, a success, and attended by a large number of our village people and friends. At nine o'clock in the morning, Spears' barge, leased for the occasion by D. W. Flagg, went loaded to Oak Grove, on the opposite side of the river, nearly up to the five-arch bridge at West Roxbury. At the same hour the flotilla of the club, under command of Fleet Captain G. T. Francis, left their moorings at the Banty boat-house, and headed up stream. They were followed during the day by many other boats and private teams, until a large and happy crowd had assembled, who made up in every essential of success what was lost in the inclement state of the weather. The program was well arranged and carried into effect by the several committees having the same in charge, all being under the immediate direction of President L. P. Everett of the club; Races on the river, etc.—Capt. G. T. Francis, in full charge; committee on entertainments—Charles L. Bird, Wm. Pierce and Chas. Twigg; refreshments—G. T. Francis and Frank J. Hale. The river program came first, with the race, for which there were five entries: President L. P. Everett, J. W. C. Easterbrook, F. W. Stockman, G. T. Francis and W. S. Baneroff. The first two were too heavy for their tubs, and consequently unable to get a start. The other three went along in good order, causing much merriment for the large number of spectators, especially the tub artistically lettered "Banty," which was the favorite, although F. W. Stockman won the race. At its conclusion, ex-Councilman Wm. Pierce delivered one of his mirthful and exceedingly interesting off-hand orations, which was well received by an appreciative audience, who gave the closest attention to all that he said. He was followed by several selections by the club's quartette. The all-important race of the day, the much heralded and chronicled Flagg-Dyson boat race came next, and was a most interesting event, and was won by the latter, indicating that the rowing-machine of the terra cotta cottage must have existed otherwise than in the imaginative minds of those who were suspicious of such, although physical disabilities rendered the loser unable to do his best. The result will be another contest at an early date; a rowing machine is expected to arrive soon at "Scamp's square." The free-for-all race was entered by F. L. Stockman, G. T. Francis and H. E. Barney, and was handsomely contested from start to finish. Francis was handicapped by having too heavy a boat, yet this did not prevent his doing his best, and, considering the disadvantages under which he was placed, he did remarkably well, and won much praise. Stockman came in first, closely followed by Barney. This closed the program, although a sailing regatta was to have taken place, but for some reason did not, to the disappointment of several who desired to see the acknowledged fastest sailor in the fleet, if not in the river, the Catamaran, which carries twenty square yards of sail, and is owned jointly by Walter Fisher and Will Easterbrook, give an exhibition of its abilities. Luncheon, promenades and social recreations concluded the exercises, which were somewhat dampened by the rain in the afternoon, but not enough to spoil all the fun. It was a grand success throughout, and afforded much pleasure to all who were fortunate enough to be present.

The City Government.

The board of Aldermen met Monday evening, his honor Mayor Kimball presiding; Aldermen Nickerson, Dearborn, Grant, Pettee and Mason were present. The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

Papers from the common council were received and disposed of in concurrence.

At 7.30 the hearing on the petition of T. Albert Ward, for a permit to put up a 5-horse-power boiler and engine in his barn was opened, but no one appeared to object, and Alderman Grant stated that there was no objection to the petition, and the hearing was closed.

There was to have been a hearing upon the burned Bailey building at Newtonville, but the Mayor stated that the building was torn down and the lumber was being removed, so there was no need of further hearings, and the whole matter was indefinitely postponed.

The Board of Health presented two recommendations; one that hereafter no building permits should be issued, until the plans for the plumbing had been submitted to the Board of Health, and a guarantee was given that the plumbing should be done in accordance with the recommendations of the Board of Health; referred to the committee on ordinances. Another communication stated that the locality of Homer street, known as Cold Spring City, needed a water supply, as now they had only wells, the water from which was liable to be contaminated, and that the residents needed a supply of city water, but the takers would not be able to meet the guarantee required. It was therefore recommended that mains be laid, with such names on the guarantee as could be secured; referred to the water board.

The Newton Boat Club represented that they were about to erect a boat house, and grade and otherwise improve their grounds, and they therefore gave notice that the city must take care of the water which was now drained upon their grounds; referred to the highway committee.

E. W. Gay requested the city to take care of the water, now emptied upon land belonging to his wife on Tremont street, just over the Newton line in the city of Boston; referred to the highway committee.

Alderman Grant moved to reconsider the vote, regarding the ordinance for the regulation of the water department, which requested the committee on ordinances to report it at once. It had been referred to them by an error, as the ordinance had been considered by the water board for a year, and no change was wanted in it. The committee, however, had spent a great deal of time upon it, and had made some changes and alterations. It effected an entire revolution in the water ordinances, as only the water committee was retained of the old regulations. The committee were ready to report the ordinance in a revised form, and were only waiting to have it printed. They would report it at the next meeting of the common council. The vote was reconsidered, and the matter was laid on the table. According to the order, the committee would have had to report the ordinance just as they had received it.

Geo. C. Lord of Park street asked for sidewalks in front of his property; referred to the highway committee. Residents of Pelham street, ward 6, asked for sidewalks; see reference.

An order was passed appropriating $21 for the payment of taxes on a strip of land on Pine street, ward 4, formerly owned by the Union Institution for Savings, and bought by the city subject to the taxes of 1885.

Alderman Grant presented an order from the committee on public property, appropriating $54,000 for the erection of an addition to the public library, the High School, drill shed, and one section of the proposed new High School building, and asked that it be referred to the finance committee. He stated that this was done to save time, and facilitate business. The public property committee had spent a good deal of time over the matter, had received plans for each of the three buildings, which were satisfactory to the High School committee, the trustees of the public library, and the superintendent and teachers of the High School. They were now ready to ask for proposals from contractors, and when these were received, the finance committee would have information as to the exact cost of the buildings, and the whole could then be discussed by the board. The matter was so referred.

The committee on highways reported an order for the paving of the gutters on Park street. $1500 was appropriated for the reconstruction of Kendrick street.

An order was passed authorizing the highway committee to purchase a strip of land 75 feet wide from Oak street to the Charles river, from Wm. D. Buck, at an expense of about 3 1/2 cents a foot. Alderman Nickerson stated that it had been found to be cheaper to purchase the land, and run the brook straight to the river, than to run it under Needham street.

The rules were suspended, as none of the license committee were present, and a permit given to Joseph Holmes, to move a small building from High street, through Chestnut and Ellis to the Needham line. Permits were granted to O. P. Lucas and A. Whitney to sell gunpowder; to Mrs. J. C. Jones of Ward 2, to keep an intelligence office; to Morgan Maloney to erect a barn on Watertown street, Ward 2; to John Collins to erect a barn on Auburndale avenue, Ward 3; to Wm. Pettengrow, to build an addition to stable on Woodland avenue, Ward 4, to alter a house on Otis street, Ward 3, to erect a house on Maple street, Ward 4, to alter a house on Oakland avenue, a house on Hammond street, ward 7, and a house on Hancock street; to D. N. B. Coffin, to erect a double tenement house on Pelham street, ward 6; to F. A. Gordon to erect a house on Summer street, ward 6.

An order was passed, appropriating $40,325 for the July expenses of the city.

Mayor Kimball stated that the Newton and Nonantum bicycle clubs had requested him to ask that an appropriation of $100 be made, to assist them in celebrating the Fourth of July in this city, as they were to be under a good deal of expense for their parade on that day, their races, etc., to which all the clubs in the vicinity had been invited, and the celebration was for the entertainment of the people of Newton. Alderman Pettee objected to making an appropriation for a special club. He favored a general appropriation for the celebration of the day, but not one for the benefit of certain individuals. The board then adjourned.

A POEM READ AT THE MEETING OF THE LASELL ALUMNAE.

[Written by Mrs. Reed; read by Mrs. Potter.]

To you, beneath Lasell's fair oaks,
So many miles away,
Greeting, dear girls of fifty-nine,
I clasp your hands to-day!
We are the self-same girls, except
A quarter century older—
Which does not mean our loyal hearts
Have grown a shadow colder.

What have they brought, these vanished years,
Since young and glad we stood Expectant, on the hither side
Of joyful womanhood?

I pray you, what may be our score
Of credit that remains—
How balance Father Time's accounts
Of losses and of gains?

Lost—youth! Adown our afternoon
Sometime's a violet's sheen,
Or morning pink of hedgerow rose,
Or cowslip's gold is seen.

But youth has gone—the bubbling life,
When but to breathe was bliss,
And present joy did quite suffice
For all we chanced to miss.

Lost—innocence of sin and ill;
Lost—ignorance of pain;
Lost—friends unrecruited, some gods, whose Powers

Our hero-worship claimed.
Lost—health's perchance—lost—buoyant hope's
Fair pinnacles of cloud.
Gone, the entrancing atmosphere
In which we lived and moved.

Lost from our vision those whose lives
Are of ourselves a part;
Them missing, we henceforth abide
In homesickness of heart!

O mute, inexorable Time,
With hush'd feet speed thy years;
Small care to thee, that heavy-eyed
We hold our watch with tears.

As one by one they say "good-bye,"
The friends of early days,
Losing their feet of pilgrim shoon
To walk the heavenly ways—
Do we not miss her here to-day,
Our sister beautiful,
Whose daily walk and work and aim
Was ever dutiful?

Gone from her children's sight, yet now
With wider power to bless Her heaven-instructed ministries,
The mother-love attest,
O, write not "dead" against her name;
She lives—she lives to-day!

In even more beauteous womanhood
Than when she passed away.
Like the sweet music which her hands
Evoked in years long fled,
She lives, a gracious memory—
We will not call her "dead."

Thus scores the column of our loss—
Now turn we to our gains.
Stand we quite bankrupt with the years?
What of Life's dower remains?

Gained—husbands, children, homes—who shall Make reckoning of this wealth?
Our inner world of thought and love,
Our stern, for life and death?

Thou canst not reckon values, Time,
In souls, and tell their worth,
Or smelt to ducats mother-love—
Thy reckoning is of earth.

Gained—age—nay, smile not, mellow lights
And wisdom's gleam appear,
Crude colors blend, harsh outlines fade
At longer range and clear.

Groups that in passing, sore and dread
Affrighted and dismayed,
Now sometimes seem in retrospect
The shadow God's wing made!

Wrenches that rent our faith in men
Sent us straight back to God,
Making us prayerful, lest we too
Forsake His grace and word.

Gained—pain! strange gain? Nay, verily,
Sins that doth turn the key,
Of others' woes, that entering, we Breathe heavenly sympathy.

We in the mist of sorrow's cloud
Exchange swift countersign
With other pilgrims in the dark—
Pain's touch is true and fine!

Lost, innocence; but gaining the power
And will to choose the Right,
Weep we that evil's seeming grace Grows ghastly in Truth's light?

How could we know, long years ago,
When strong were hope and health,
That even pain had recompense,
That poverty holds wealth?

Slowly and painfully we learn
That our dear Lord would teach.
Still children, how we sigh and strive Earth's pleasant fruits to reach!

We beat, with bruised wings, our cage
As our beloved go,
We cry "Be merciful, O God!
Thou know'st we love them so!"

Yet, as they silently go forth,
Heaven lies about our way,
The real home is where they bide,
The transient where we stay.

This poor life grows significant
Only as we are trained,
Each by his wisdom absolute,
So that our saints have gained,
And day by day, and year by year,
God's truth throws broader light,
Unfolding with each century's dawn
Before man's seeking sight.

We live in grand, heroic time,
Albion with vital thrills;
Truth glows with unaccustomed light,
Caught from the heavenly hills.

For truth is life, and life must grow—
The quickening Spirit waits
To fit our souls—as to the Sun
We turn us toward His Face!

So hope grows stronger—though its type
Is higher than of yore;
We feel how broad and strong the Love
That bideth evermore!

His morning dawn lights up the sky—
His "kingdom is at hand"—
Even where cruelty abides
His loyal soldiers stand.

And good can only be of Him,
Whatever name it bear;
For feeblest trust toward Him is faith,
And longing is but prayer!

So stands our tale of loss and gain,
Dear girls of fifty-nine,
Would we retrace the hither way Back of our mid-day line?

Nay, verily, better by far,
Though knowledge come by pain,
To know what enemies we face
Than in false bliss remain.

Better, if He shall count us fit
To help and bless and cheer,
Than rest alone in bliss of love
Of us we hold most dear.

Since thus we grow, like Him we serve—
"The Life, the Truth, the Way"— Cheer comrades! greeting and good-bye.
"Faith—Labor—Victory!"

The Read Fund Picnic.

The annual picnic which the Read fund provides for the scholars of wards one and seven, will be held on Saturday, June 26th, the weather permitting. The committee has selected Spy Pond Grove, Arlington, after considering the merits of a dozen or more places that were recommended, as the most available place. The grove has been provided with a large number of swings and other attractions for the children, and they are sure of a day of pleasure. Conveyance to the grove will be by means of horse cars, which will leave Nonantum Square at 8.30 a.m., and will bring the children home before 6 p.m. Refreshments will be provided at the grove, and those who have not yet secured tickets can procure them of the teachers of the schools, or of the sub-committee, Messrs. James W. French, J. C. Kennedy, or Lewis E. Coffin.
